PROTO-NOSTRATIC *ʔ

613. Proto-Nostratic 1st singular personal pronoun stem $*\gamma a-$ ($\sim '\gamma\partial-$), $\gamma i-$ ($\sim *'\gamma e-$)
 'I, me'

No doubt originally the same as the deictic particles $\gamma a-$, $\gamma i-$ listed below.

Note: The Chukchi forms support the view that we are dealing with what was originally a deictic particle here inasmuch as the same patterning is found in both the first and second person predicative pronoun stems. Moreover, it is the proximate deictic form $*\gamma i-$ ($\sim '\gamma e-$) that is represented in Chukchi-Kamchatkan as opposed to the distant form $\gamma a-$ ($\sim '\gamma\partial-$) found in Afrasian (the Proto-Indo-European forms $\gamma e+k'-$, $\gamma e+g^h-$, and $\gamma e+k^h-$ are phonologically ambiguous). This seems to indicate that independent developments were involved in each branch, using the same basic elements.

614. Proto-Nostratic demonstrative stems (originally deictic particles):
 Proximate: $*\gamma i-$ ($\sim *'\gamma e-$) 'this';
 Intermediate: $*\gamma u-$ ($\sim *'\gamma o-$) 'that';
 Distant: $*\gamma a-$ ($\sim *'\gamma\partial-$) 'that yonder, that over there'

Note: These stems often combined with other deictic particles: $\gamma a/i/u+na-$, $\gamma a/i/u+\xi a-$, $\gamma a/i/u+ma-$, $\gamma a/i/u+t^h a-$, $\gamma a/i/u+k^h a-$, $\gamma a/i/u+ya-$, etc.

615. Proto-Nostratic (n.) $*\gamma ab-a$ 'strength, power'; (adj.) 'strong, mighty'
616. Proto-Nostratic (n.) $*\gamma ab(b)a \sim *'\gamma ap^h(p^h)a$ 'father, forefather' (nursery word)
617. Proto-Nostratic root $*\gamma ad-$ ($\sim *'\gamma\partial d-$):
 (vb.) $*\gamma ad-$ 'to be strong, mighty, powerful, exalted';
 (n.) $*\gamma ad-a$ 'lord, master'; (adj.) 'strong, mighty, powerful, exalted'
618. Proto-Nostratic (n.) $*\gamma ad^y-a$ 'thorn'; (adj.) 'pointed, sharp, prickly'
619. Proto-Nostratic (n.) $*\gamma a\acute{h}-a$ 'cow'
620. Proto-Nostratic root $*\gamma a\acute{h}-$ ($\sim *'\gamma\partial\acute{h}-$):
 (vb.) $*\gamma a\acute{h}-$ 'to be young, youthful, tender, fresh';
 (n.) $*\gamma a\acute{h}-a$ 'a youth, young man, younger brother'; (adj.) 'young, tender'

621. Proto-Nostratic root * λak^h - (~ * $\lambda \partial k^h$ -):
 (vb.) * λak^h - ‘to eat’;
 (n.) * λak^h -a ‘food, meal; fodder, feed, morsel’
622. Proto-Nostratic root * λak^h - (~ * $\lambda \partial k^h$ -):
 (vb.) * λak^h - ‘to be evil, wicked, bad; to hurt, to harm’;
 (n.) * λak^h -a ‘evil, wickedness, harm’
623. Proto-Nostratic root * λak^h - (~ * $\lambda \partial k^h$ -):
 (vb.) * λak^h - ‘to dig’;
 (n.) * λak^h -a ‘that which is dug: digging, ditch, trench, hole; that which is used to dig: carving tool, chisel, cutter, gouge’
624. Proto-Nostratic (n.) * $\lambda ak^h k^h a$ ‘older female relative’ (nursery word)
 Note also:
 (n.) * $\lambda ak^h k^h a$ ‘older male relative’
625. Proto-Nostratic (n.) * $\lambda ak^h k^h a$ ‘older male relative’ (nursery word)
 Note also:
 (n.) * $\lambda ak^h k^h a$ ‘older female relative’
626. Proto-Nostratic root * λak^{wh} - (~ * $\lambda \partial k^{wh}$ -):
 (vb.) * λak^{wh} - ‘to be hot, to burn; to warm oneself’;
 (n.) * λak^{wh} -a ‘heat, fire’
627. Proto-Nostratic root * λal - (~ * $\lambda \partial l$ -):
 (vb.) * λal - ‘to purify, to cleanse’ (> ‘to sift, to clean grain’ in the daughter languages);
 (n.) * λal -a ‘the act of washing, cleaning; that which is washed, cleaned’
- Semantics as in Sanskrit punā́ti ‘to make clean, clear, pure, or bright; to cleanse, to purify, to purge, to clarify; (with sáktum) to cleanse from chaff, to winnow; to sift, to discriminate, to discern’, (passive) pū́yáte ‘to be cleaned, washed, or purified’; related to Old High German fowen ‘to sift, to clean grain’ and Latin pūrus ‘clean, pure’.
628. Proto-Nostratic root * λal - (~ * $\lambda \partial l$ -) (perhaps also * λel -, * λul -):
 (vb.) * λal - ‘to be not so-and-so or such-and-such’;
 (n.) * λal -a ‘nothing’
- Originally a negative verb stem meaning ‘to be not so-and-so or such-and-such’ — later used in some branches as a negative particle.
629. Proto-Nostratic root * λam - (~ * $\lambda \partial m$ -):
 (vb.) * λam - ‘to seize, to grasp, to take, to touch, to hold (closely or tightly)’;

- (n.) ʔam-a* ‘grasp, hold, hand(ful)’; (adj.) ‘seized, grasped, touched, held, obtained’
630. Proto-Nostratic (n.) ʔam-a* ‘time, moment, point of time’; (particle) ‘now’
631. Proto-Nostratic (n.) ʔam(m)a* ‘mother’ (nursery word)
Note also:
(n.) ʔema* ‘older female relative; mother; (older) woman’
632. Proto-Nostratic root ʔan-* (~ ʔən-*):
(vb.) ʔan-* ‘to load up and go, to send off’;
(n.) ʔan-a* ‘load, burden’
633. Proto-Nostratic root ʔan^v-* (~ ʔən^v-*):

(vb.) ʔit’-* ‘to chew, to bite, to eat, to consume’;

(n.) ʔit’-a* ‘the act of eating; that which is eaten: food, nourishment’

673. Proto-Nostratic root ʔiy-* (~ ʔey-*):

(vb.) ʔiy-* ‘to come, to go’;

(n.) ʔiy-a* ‘approach, arrival; path, way’

Note also:

(vb.) ʔay-* ‘to go, to proceed’;

(n.) ʔay-a* ‘journey’

674. Proto-Nostratic 1st person personal pronoun stem ʔiya*: (a) ‘by me’; (b) agent marker of the 1st singular of verbs; (c) postnominal possessive pronoun: ‘my’
675. Proto-Nostratic (n.) ʔom-a* ‘rounded prominence at the end of a bone forming a ball and socket joint with the hollow part of another bone, condyle (of the lower jaw, the shoulder, the elbow, the hip, etc.)’

Note: Semantic shifts took place in Semitic, Indo-European, and, in part, Altaic; the original meaning was preserved in Egyptian and Turkic.

676. Proto-Nostratic root ʔor-*:
 (vb.) ʔor-* ‘to move rapidly, quickly, hastily; to set in motion’;
 (n.) ʔor-a* ‘any rapid motion: running, flowing, pouring, etc.’; (adj.) ‘rapid, quick, hasty’

680. Proto-Nostratic root ʔow-*:
 Extended form:
 (vb.) ʔow-V-ħ-* ‘to hatch eggs’;
 (n.) ʔow-ħ-a* ‘egg’

Dolgopolsky has proposed a very attractive etymology here. However, it must be noted that Arabic ʔāḥ ‘eggwhite, albumen’ is isolated within Semitic. Moreover, even though the Proto-Indo-European form is traditionally reconstructed as ōu̯jom* ‘egg’, no single reconstruction can account for all of the forms found in the Indo-European daughter languages. Accordingly, there are difficulties with this etymology. If this is a valid etymology, it would imply that the Proto-Indo-European form is to be reconstructed as  \mathcal{R}_2 ou \mathcal{R}_2 iom* ‘egg’, with short vowel in the first syllable and a laryngeal ( \mathcal{R}_2 [= * \hbar h]) between u and i* (the long vowel found in the first syllable of the forms attested in several of the Indo-European daughter languages would then be due to compensatory lengthening following the loss of this laryngeal). There may have been a non-apophonic o* (original, or inherited, o*) in the first syllable, in which case the Proto-Nostratic form would have been  $\mathcal{R}ow$ - \hbar -*. Reconstructing a medial laryngeal ( \mathcal{R}_2 [= * \hbar h]) would also account for the Germanic developments.  $\mathcal{R}ow\hbar$ -yo-m (traditional  \mathcal{R}_2 ou \mathcal{R}_2 iom*) ‘egg’ cannot, as is often assumed, be a derivative of the common Proto-Indo-European word for ‘bird’, which requires an initial a-coloring laryngeal (preserved in Armenian): A $\acute{e}w$ -i-s* [A $\acute{a}w$ -i-s*], Aw- $\acute{e}y$ -s* > Armenian hav ‘bird, hen, chicken’; Latin avis ‘a bird’; Umbrian (acc.) avif ‘bird’; Sanskrit (nom. sg.) vī-h, (Rigveda) vé-h ‘a bird’; etc.

681. Proto-Nostratic root  $\mathcal{R}oy$ -*:
 (vb.)  $\mathcal{R}oy$ -* ‘to be by oneself, to be alone’;
 (n.)  $\mathcal{R}oy$ -a* ‘solitude, aloneness’; (adj.) ‘single, alone; one’
682. Proto-Nostratic (n.)  $\mathcal{R}ul$ -a* ‘the bottom or lowest part of anything; the sole of the foot; soil, earth, ground, land’
- Semantics as in Latin solum ‘the bottom or lowest part of anything; the sole of the foot; soil, earth, ground, land’ (cf. Buck 1949:1.212).
683. Proto-Nostratic deictic stem indicating distance farthest away from the speaker

A CRITICAL REVIEW OF VOLUMES 1 AND 2 OF:

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

In 2008, I prepared an 82-page critical peer review of Aharon Dolgopolsky's massive Nostratic Dictionary at the request of the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research at the University of Cambridge, United Kingdom. That review is available for free download from academia.edu. However, until recently, I had not prepared a similar review of Vladislav Markovič Illič-Svityč's (Владислав Маркович Иллич-Свитыч) Опыт сравнения ностратических языков (семитохамитский, картвельский, индоевропейский, уральский, дравидийский, алтайский) [An Attempt at a Comparison of the Nostratic Languages (Hamito-Semitic, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Dravidian, Altaic)] (1971—1984). I finally completed such a review in August 2020 — this Appendix is an enhanced and corrected version of that review.

Illič-Svityč (12 September 1934—22 August 1966) prepared an earlier (1965), preliminary summary of his research entitled “Материалы к сравнительному словарю ностратических языков (индоевропейский, алтайский, уральский, дравидский, картвельский, семитохамитский)” [Materials for a Comparative Dictionary of the Nostratic Languages (Indo-European, Altaic, Uralic, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Hamito-Semitic)], Этимология (Ėtimologija) 1965:321—373. That work is not under review here, though it is cited where appropriate. Subsequently, two volumes of his Nostratic dictionary appeared. The first volume was partially prepared by Illič-Svityč himself and was arranged for publication by a team of his associates. It was published in 1971. Vladimir Dybo prepared the introductory material found in Volume 1, including the tables of sound correspondences. The second volume was prepared solely by a team of scholars, based upon Illič-Svityč's notes. It was published in 1976. After a considerable delay, a third volume under Illič-Svityč's name was published in 1984. This volume was prepared by a team of scholars and was not based directly upon Illič-Svityč's notes. Nothing further has appeared. Only the first two volumes will be reviewed here, that is, only the material actually prepared by Illič-Svityč himself or based upon his notes.

In Chapter 1, §1.5, I noted the following problem areas with Illič-Svityč's work (and that of Dolgopolsky as well):

Let me begin by stating unequivocally that I have the highest admiration for what Moscovite scholarship (especially the work of V. M. Illič-Svityč and A. B. Dolgopolsky — some of the work done by other Russian scholars is not on the same level) on Nostratic has achieved. Their research has opened up new and exciting possibilities and given Nostratic studies new respectability. However, this does not mean that I agree with everything they say. I regard their work as a pioneering effort and, as such, subject to modification in light of advances in linguistic theory, in light of new data from the Nostratic daughter languages, and in light of findings from typological studies that give us a better understanding of the kind of patterning that is found in natural languages as well as a better understanding of what is characteristic of language in general, including language change.

Let us begin by looking at phonology: In 1972 and 1973, the Georgian scholar Thomas V. Gamkrelidze and the Russian scholar Vjačeslav V. Ivanov jointly proposed a radical reinterpretation of the Proto-Indo-European stop system. According to their reinterpretation, the Proto-Indo-European stop system was characterized by the three-way contrast glottalized ~ voiceless (aspirated) ~ voiced (aspirated). In this revised interpretation, aspiration is viewed as a redundant feature, and the phonemes in question could also be realized as allophonic variants without aspiration. Paul J. Hopper made a similar proposal at about the same time (Hopper 1973). I should point out here that, even though I support the revisions proposed by Gamkrelidze, Hopper, and Ivanov, my views are not dependent upon any particular reconstruction of the Proto-Indo-European stop system — the sound correspondences I have proposed can be maintained using the traditional reconstruction as well. What the new views of Proto-Indo-European consonantism did was bring into light the implausibility of certain Nostratic sound correspondences established by Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky (see below for details). Moreover, this new interpretation opened new possibilities for comparing Proto-Indo-European with the other Nostratic daughter languages, especially Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian, each of which had a similar three-way contrast. The simplest and most straightforward assumption would be that the glottalized stops posited by Gamkrelidze, Hopper, and Ivanov for Proto-Indo-European would correspond to glottalized stops in Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian, while the voiceless stops would correspond to voiceless stops and voiced stops to voiced stops. This, however, is quite different from the correspondences proposed by Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky. They see the glottalized stops of Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian as corresponding to the traditional plain voiceless stops of Proto-Indo-European, while the voiceless stops in the former two branches are seen as corresponding to the traditional plain voiced stops of Proto-Indo-European, and, finally, the voiced stops to the traditional voiced aspirates of Proto-Indo-European. Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky then reconstruct the Proto-Nostratic phonological system on the model of Kartvelian and Afrasian, with the three-way contrast glottalized ~ voiceless ~ voiced in the series of stops and affricates.

The mistake that Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky made was in trying to equate the glottalized stops of Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian with the traditional plain voiceless stops of Proto-Indo-European. Their reconstruction would make the glottalized stops the least marked members in the Proto-Nostratic bilabial series and the most marked in the velar series. Such a reconstruction is thus in contradiction to typological evidence, according to which glottalized stops uniformly have the opposite frequency distribution (most marked in the bilabial series and least marked in the velar series [for details, cf. Gamkrelidze 1978]). The reason that Illič-Svityč's and Dolgopolsky's reconstruction contradicts the typological evidence is as follows: Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky posit glottalics for Proto-Nostratic based upon a small number of seemingly solid examples in which glottalics in Proto-Afrasian and/or Proto-Kartvelian appear to correspond to traditional plain voiceless stops in Proto-Indo-European. Based upon these examples, they assume that, whenever there is a voiceless stop in the Proto-Indo-European examples they cite, a glottalic is to be reconstructed for Proto-Nostratic, even when there are no glottalics in the corresponding Kartvelian and Afrasian forms! This means that the Proto-Nostratic glottalics have the same frequency distribution as the Proto-Indo-European plain voiceless stops. Clearly, this cannot be correct. The main consequence of the mistaken comparison of the glottalized stops of Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian with the traditional plain voiceless stops of Proto-Indo-European is that Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky are led to posit forms for Proto-Nostratic based upon theoretical considerations but for which there is absolutely no evidence in any of the daughter languages. The following examples illustrate the ad hoc nature of these reconstructions:

1. Dolgopolsky (1998:17) reconstructs a second singular personal pronoun tū* > t̥i* 'thou', with an initial glottalized dental, based upon data from Indo-European, Afrasian, Uralic, and Mongolian. When one looks at the attested forms in the daughter languages, one cannot find a single form anywhere that begins with a glottalized consonant. Indeed, in natural languages having glottalized consonants, these sounds tend to be underrepresented in pronoun stems and inflectional affixes. What, then, is the basis for the reconstruction t̥i*? — nothing more than an ad hoc rule set up by Illič-Svityč.
2. Dolgopolsky (1998:17) also reconstructs an interrogative stem ko-* 'who?' (see also Illič-Svityč 1971—1984.I:355—356, no. 232, ko* 'who'). As in the preceding example, there is no evidence in any of the Nostratic daughter languages to support the reconstruction of an initial glottalized velar here.

Do these criticisms completely invalidate the cognate sets proposed by Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky in which glottalics in Kartvelian and Afrasian appear to correspond to plain voiceless stops in Indo-European? Well, no, not exactly — it is not quite that simple. In some cases, the etymologies are correct, but the Proto-Nostratic reconstructions are wrong. This applies to the examples cited above — for the second person personal pronoun, I would reconstruct Proto-Nostratic tʰi*, and, in place of k̥o-* ‘who?’, I would reconstruct Proto-Nostratic kʷh̥a-. Other examples adduced by Illič-Svityč and Dolgopolsky admit alternative explanations, while still others are questionable from a semantic point of view and should be abandoned. Once the questionable examples are removed, there is an extremely small number (no more than a handful) left over that appear to support their position. However, compared to the massive counter-evidence in which glottalized stops in Kartvelian and Afrasian correspond to similar sounds (the traditional plain voiced stops) in Proto-Indo-European, even these residual examples become suspect (they may be borrowings or simply false cognates). Finally, there are even some examples where Dolgopolsky’s and Illič-Svityč’s comparison of glottalized stops in Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian with plain voiceless stops in Proto-Indo-European is correct. This occurs in the cases where two glottalics originally appeared in a Proto-Nostratic root: C’VC’-. Such roots are preserved without change in Proto-Kartvelian and Proto-Afrasian, while in Proto-Indo-European, they have been subject to a rule of regressive deglottalization: C’VC’- > CVC’-.

Another major shortcoming is in Illič-Svityč’s reconstruction of the Proto-Nostratic vowel system, which, according to him, is essentially that of modern Finnish. It simply stretches credibility beyond reasonable bounds to assume that the Proto-Nostratic vowel system could have been preserved unchanged in Finnish, especially considering the many millennia that must have passed between the dissolution of the Nostratic parent language and the emergence of Finnish (Serebrennikov 1986:75 makes the same point). No doubt, this erroneous reconstruction came about as a result of Illič-Svityč’s failure to deal with the question of subgrouping. The Uralic-Yukaghir phylum, of which Finnish is a member, belongs to the Eurasiatic branch of Nostratic. Now, Eurasiatic is several millennia younger than Afrasian, which appears to be the oldest branch of the Nostratic macrofamily. Therefore, Afrasian must play a key role in the reconstruction of the Proto-Nostratic vowel system, and the Uralic-Yukaghir vowel system must be considered a later development that cannot possibly represent the original state of affairs.

In closing, we may note that Alexis Manaster Ramer (1997:94—96) arrived at the same conclusions reached here regarding the need to reexamine the Nostratic sound correspondences proposed by Illič-Svityč (and, by implication, Dolgopolsky as well) in light of typological considerations. Specifically, he writes:

6.1. Finally, quite recently, I decided to see what would happen if one counted up the occurrences of the different stops (voiceless vs. voiced vs. glottalized as well as labial vs. coronal vs. velar) reconstructed for Nostratic by Illich-Svitych. I only performed the experiment on root-initial stops, with the following results: (they are given as approximations because there is a problem arriving at exact figures given that there [are] some cases where it is difficult to tell whether one is dealing with a single Nostratic form or two, or whether a particular form should begin with this or that stop):

*b 50+	*d 20+	*g 40+

The first observation (see Manaster Ramer in press a) was that ... the relative frequencies of the three phonation types (voiced, voiceless, glottalized) posited for Proto-Nostratic stops, as reflected in the sets of cognates compiled by Illich-Svitych, seem to be inconsistent with typological predictions. Specifically, at least in initial position, the series of stops reconstructed as glottalized is much more frequent at all points of articulation than the series reconstructed as (plain) voiceless.

Since one expects glottalized stops to be more marked and hence less frequent than plain voiceless, in particular, something was amiss. However, just as in the case of the clusters and affricates discussed above, the solution turned out to be quite simple. Given the markedness considerations, I would suggest that the “glottalized” series was actually plain voiceless in Proto-Nostratic, while the “voiceless” series represented some more marked phonation type, glottalized or perhaps aspirated. This is consistent with the fact that the Nostratic series Illich-Svitych wrote as “glottalized” is in fact realized as glottalized only in parts of Afro-Asiatic and in Kartvelian, and in the latter it is easy to imagine that this could be a contact-induced development.

This reinterpretation of Nostratic ... naturally calls to mind the glottalic theory of Indo-European. As it happens, the stop series reconstructed by Illich-Svitych as plain voiceless and by me as glottalized (or aspirated) comes out in Proto-Indo-European as that series of stops which is traditionally reconstructed as voiced (media) but which many scholars have recently interpreted as glottalized.

Nostratic (Illich-Svitych)	Nostratic (Manaster Ramer)	Indo-European (Traditional)	Indo-European (Glottalic)
*t	*t' (or *t ^h)	*d	*t'

Totally unexpectedly, typological considerations provide us with arguments for reinterpreting the Nostratic stop series in a way that fits quite well with the glottalic theory of Indo-European. Of course, there is no reason in general to expect the phonetics of related languages and proto-languages to agree in this way, and such a convergence cannot be regarded as a criterion or an argument for relatedness among languages, since that would entail the “misuse of similarity” which Hamp (1992) cautions against. But it is not an unwelcome development when it occurs.

Now, there is another rather troublesome problem that must be addressed. To this day, more than half a century after it first appeared, the work on Nostratic by Illič-Svityč and, to a lesser extent, Dolgopolsky are seen as a source of national pride in Russia, so much so that some non-Russian scholars have compared the adulation that their work has received to a “cult”. Any attempt to criticize or even modify/correct the work of Illič-Svityč is, more often than not, met with ill-tempered, gratuitous, and irrational outbursts by some Russian scholars — “defend at any cost”. Needless to say, this attitude tends to stifle progress in the study of distant-linguistic relationships among the languages/language families involved. At the same time, the defects in the work of Illič-Svityč (and Dolgopolsky) have been recognized by non-Russian (and even some Russian) scholars from the very beginning and have been repeated over and over again in the relevant literature almost ad nauseum. Russian scholars have every right to be proud of the unquestionably impressive accomplishments of Illič-Svityč, but, surely, the time is long past for a level of objectivity, civility, and honesty that will lead to genuine advancements in the field.

CRITERIA FOR EVALUATION

I will use the same scale here that I used in my review of Dolgopolsky’s Nostratic Dictionary:

- Strong: This is a solid etymology, without major problems.
- Possible: This is a plausible etymology, but there are problem areas. Quite often, one of the putative cognates in the daughter languages (at the macro level, not individual cited forms) does not belong or is questionable, while the remaining cognates do, indeed, fit together quite well. There may also be minor problems with the semantics or with the phonology, but these can usually be explained in terms of widely-attested semantic shifts or phonological processes.
- Weak: There are major problems with this etymology, usually either with the semantics or the phonology or with the quality or quantity of the supporting material from the daughter languages. Nonetheless, this etymology is not to be rejected outright. Typically, there are parts that can be salvaged, though the etymology cannot stand as written.
- Rejected: There are so many problems with this etymology that it must be fully disqualified. Some of these etymologies may involve borrowings.

Each entry has been evaluated exclusively in terms of the material cited from the daughter languages to determine the extent to which viable comparisons were proposed, that is to say, whether they had a chance of being true cognates or whether they were merely specious. Moreover, the validity of the reconstructed forms posited by Illič-Svityč was also evaluated. Finally, the etymologies were further judged both in terms of the sound correspondences proposed by Illič-Svityč (and extracted and formatted into tables by Vladimir Dybo) and the alternative set proposed by Allan R. Bomhard (Chapter 12, §12.6, table of sound correspondences). As noted above, some of the sound laws proposed by Illič-Svityč are simply wrong.

In evaluating the individual etymologies, the vowels were given as much weight as the consonants. If there was not a perfect or nearly perfect match in both, or if Illič-Svityč failed to give a convincing explanation for exceptions to the expected correspondences, the etymology was rejected, even if the semantics were solid. In like manner, even though the correspondences may have been flawless, an etymology was rejected or evaluated as “weak” if the semantics were not perfect or nearly perfect. In spite of all of these conditions, whenever there were uncertainties, Illič-Svityč was always given the benefit of the doubt. I also tried to be mindful that Illič-Svityč based his proposals on the best material that was available to him at the time. Needless to say, there have been many advances since then in each of the languages/language families which Illič-Svityč included in his version of Nostratic. Newer works are cited in this review where appropriate.

Finally, reviews of Illič-Svityč's work prepared by other scholars have also been consulted.

ILLIČ-SVITYČ'S NOSTRATIC DICTIONARY: VOLUME 1

Illič-Svityč's transcription has been retained (note: Illič-Svityč uses the symbol /Λ/ to indicate a vowel of indeterminate quality). I have mostly used Mark Kaiser's English translations from the original Russian, though, in several cases, I have used my own translations instead. Where they exist, I provide references to the alternative Nostratic etymologies I have proposed in this book (referred to by the entry number) but not to those proposed by Dolgopolsky, unless relevant to the discussion, inasmuch as he and Illič-Svityč follow essentially the same system and inasmuch as I have already evaluated Dolgopolsky's work. Finally, I have retained the older term “Hamito-Semitic” as the translation for “семитохамитский” when citing Illič-Svityč's work since this is the term he preferred. Elsewhere, I use “Afrasian” (= “Afroasiatic”) in this review.

1. (?) baHli* ‘wound, pain’: Indo-European bhehl-* ‘wound, pain’ ~ Altaic [bāli* ‘wound’]: Rejected.

Comments:

1. According to Bomhard (no. 69), the Proto-Indo-European form is to be reconstructed as b^hol-/b^hl- ‘(adj.) worn out, weak; (n.) misfortune, calamity’ based upon all of the related forms from the Indo-European daughter languages (note: no medial laryngeal is reconstructed in any of the standard etymological dictionaries for either the Indo-European parent language or for any of the daughter languages).

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:345) reconstruct Proto-Altaic biǰǰča* (= biǰǰʷča*) ‘harm, wound’.

Proto-Nostratic root bul-* (~ bol-*):

(vb.) bul-* ‘to crush, to grind, to weaken, to wear down; to become worn out, weak, tired, old’;

(n.) bul-a* ‘that which is worn out, weak, tired: weakness, decline, decay, wear, etc.; (adj.) worn out, weak, tired, old’

2. baHa* ‘to tie to’: Kartvelian b-* ‘to tie to, to hang’ ~ Altaic bā-* ‘to tie to’. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root baʕ-* (~ bəʕ-*):

(vb.) baʕ-* ‘to tie, to bind; to attach, to fasten’;

(n.) baʕ-a* ‘tie, bond, bandage, fastening’

3. baKa* ‘to look’: Hamito-Semitic bq-* ‘to look’ ~ Altaic baka-* ‘to look’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The meaning in Afrasian is more ‘to look at, to look over, to examine’.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:323) reconstruct Proto-Altaic bǰka* ‘to look, to watch’.
3. Not in Bomhard (this book).

4. baʕ/u/* ‘to swallow’: Hamito-Semitic blʕ* ‘to swallow’ ~ Altaic balgu-* /bilgu* ‘to swallow; throat’. Strong.

Comments:

1. A laryngeal (/ʕ/) should not be reconstructed in the Proto-Nostratic form. Proto-Afrasian ʕ/* does not correspond to Proto-Altaic /g/*.
2. The Chara (Чара) (North Omotic) form (borkā) included by Illič-Svityč does not belong here.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:344) reconstruct Proto-Altaic biǰge* ‘throat; to swallow’.

Proto-Nostratic root bal-* (~ bəl-*):
 (vb.) bal-* 'to bite, to eat';
 (n.) bal-a* 'bite, morsel'

5. balga* 'to flash, to sparkle': Hamito-Semitic brq* 'flash, lightning' ~ Kartvelian berçq-* 'to flash, to sparkle' ~ Indo-European bhelg-/bhleg-* 'to flash, to sparkle' ~ Altaic [balkλ-* 'to shine, to sparkle']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. This etymology cannot stand as written and, therefore, must be disqualified. Illič-Svityč has confused two separate, unrelated Proto-Nostratic stems here. Each is a solid Nostratic etymology in its own right, but they do not belong together.
2. There is no basis whatsoever for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic /g/, even within the context of the evidence supplied by Illič-Svityč. This violates Illič-Svityč's own sound correspondences: Proto-Afrasian /q/ does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian /ç/* nor to Proto-Indo-European /g/*.

Bomhard (no. 21) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms for the first etymology based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root bal-* (~ bəl-*):
 (vb.) bal-* 'to shine, to be bright';
 (n.) bal-a* 'glitter, gleam, brightness'

Bomhard (no. 33) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms for the second etymology based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bər-*):
 (vb.) bar-* 'to shine, to be bright, to sparkle, to flash';
 (n.) bar-a* 'light, brightness; lightning'

6. (?) balλ* 'blind': Hamito-Semitic bll* 'blind' ~ Altaic balλ* 'blind'. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root bal-* (~ bəl-*):

(vb.) bal-* ‘to be or become dark, obscure, blind’;

(n.) bal-a* ‘darkness, obscurity, blindness’; (adj.) ‘dark, obscure, blind’

7. bara* ‘big, good’: Indo-European bher-* ‘big, good’ ~ Uralic para* ‘good’ ~ Dravidian [par-* ‘big’] ~ Altaic [bara* ‘much/many’]. Possible.

Comment: The Dravidian and Altaic forms should be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bər-*):

(vb.) bar-* ‘to be kind, charitable, beneficent; to do good’;

(n.) bar-a* ‘goodness, kindness’; (adj.) ‘good, kind, beneficent’

8. bari* ‘to take’: Hamito-Semitic br-* ‘to catch, to grab’ ~ Indo-European bher-* ‘to take, to bring, to carry’ ~ (?) Dravidian peɽ-* ‘to pick up, to gather’ ~ Altaic bari-* ‘to take into the hands’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian and Indo-European forms included by Illič-Svityč should be removed.
2. Better Dravidian forms to compare here are:

Tamil parru (parri-) ‘(vb.) to grasp, to seize, to catch, to hold, to adhere to, to touch, to comprehend; to hold (as color), to be kindled, to have effect (as drugs), to stick, to become joined to or welded to (as metals soldered), to be fitting, to be sufficient; (n.) grasp, seizure, acceptance, adherence, affection, friendship, affinity, solder, paste’, parram ‘grasping’; Malayalam parru ‘adhesion, close relation, friendship’, parruka ‘to stick to, to adhere, to catch, to suit, to fit, to take effect (as fire), to get, to seize’; Kota paɽ- (pac-) ‘to catch, to seize, to hold, to hold out, to be obstinate, to resolve, to catch (fire), to suit, to please’; Kannada paṭṭu ‘(vb.) to seize, to catch, to hold, to take hold of; to be held or contained, to stick to; (n.) hold, seizure, firm grasp, persistence, resolution, obstinacy, habit, coherence’; Tuḷu pattuni ‘to hold, to catch; to adhere, to stick, to be joined’; Telugu paṭṭu ‘(vb.) to hold, to catch, to seize, to take hold of, to restrain, to receive; to be required (days, money), to be contained; (n.) hold, grasp, seizure, a wrestler’s hold, perseverance, obstinacy, diligence’; Parji patt- ‘to take hold of, to buy’; Gadba (Ollari) pat- ‘to take hold of, to catch, to buy, (Salur) patt- ‘to take hold of, to catch’.

3. It is better to derive Proto-Indo-European b^her-/*b^hor-/b^hγ- 'to bear, to carry; to bring forth, to bear children', b^hernos/b^hornos 'son, child' from the following Proto-Nostratic forms (cf. Bomhard, no. 30):

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bār-*):
 (vb.) bar-* 'to bear children, to give birth';
 (n.) bar-a* 'child'

4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:328) reconstruct Proto-Altaic bāra* 'goods; to possess, to earn'. It appears to me that they have combined two separate stems in their etymology: (1) Proto-Altaic bāra* 'to increase; many, capacious' (> Proto-Tungus bara-* 'to increase; many, capacious') and (2) Proto-Altaic bari-* 'to take, to hold' (> Proto-Mongolian bari-* 'to take, to hold'; Proto-Turkic bār* 'there is, there are; existence, goods'). The overlapping meanings found among some of the forms in the various Altaic daughter languages leads me to suspect that there may have been lexical diffusion involved here.

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bār-*):
 (vb.) bar-* 'to take or seize hold of, to grasp';
 (n.) bar-a* 'hold, grasp, seizure'

9. berg/i/* 'high': Hamito-Semitic brg* 'high' ~ (?) Kartvelian brg-e* 'high' ~ Indo-European bherǵh-/bhreǵh- 'high' ~ Uralic [p/e/r/-kA/* 'high'] ~ (?) Dravidian pēḷ-* 'high'. Possible.

Comment: The Uralic form included by Illič-Svityč should be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root bir-* (~ ber-*):
 (vb.) bir-* 'to swell, to rise, to grow';
 (n.) bir-a* 'largeness, greatness, height, tallness'; (adj.) 'big, large, great, tall'
 Extended form:
 (vb.) bir-V-g-* 'to be high';
 (n.) bir-g-a* 'height, high place'; (adj.) 'high, tall, lofty'

Note: The unextended stem is found in Dravidian.

10. (?) be/rH/u* ‘to give’: Hamito-Semitic [br/H/* ‘to give’] ~ Altaic [bērū-* ‘to give’]. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:353) reconstruct Proto-Altaic biōr[é]* ‘to give; to take, to collect’.

11. [Descriptive] biĀa* ‘small’: Uralic [piĀa* ‘small’] ~ Dravidian pīc-/picc-* ‘small, short’ ~ Altaic biĉa* ‘small’. Rejected.

12. biĉa* ‘to break’: Hamito-Semitic bš-/bq-* ‘to break, to smash, to press’ ~ Kartvelian biĉ-* ‘to break, to crumble’ ~ Indo-European peis-* ‘to smash, to crush, to press’ ~ Dravidian pīc-* ‘to smash, to shell, to knead’. Weak.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed. It violates Illič-Svityč’s own sound correspondences: Proto-Indo-European p/* is not derived from Proto-Nostratic b/, and it never corresponds either to Proto-Kartvelian b/ or to Proto-Afrasian b/*.
 2. According to Klimov (1998:14) and Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:54), the Proto-Kartvelian form is to be reconstructed as beĉ-/biĉ-* ‘to break, to crumble’.
13. bilwi* ‘cloud’: Hamito-Semitic bjl* ‘heavenly waters, cloud’ ~ Uralic pilwe* ‘cloud’ ~ Altaic [buli-t* ‘cloud’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. This is another case where Illič-Svityč violates his own sound correspondences — the Uralic and Altaic vowels do not correspond.
 2. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč does not form a coherent Afrasian etymology.
14. [Descriptive] bil’a* ‘to scream’: Kartvelian bir-* ‘to sing’ ~ Indo-European bhel-* ‘to talk, to roar’ ~ Dravidian pi’a-* ‘to scream’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The sound correspondences do not work — Proto-Kartvelian r/* does not correspond to either Proto-Indo-European l/* or Proto-Dravidian l/*.
 2. Proto-Indo-European e/* does not correspond to either Proto-Kartvelian i/* or Proto-Dravidian i/* here.
 3. The semantics are weak. Moreover, the label “descriptive” [дескрипт.] is inappropriate.
15. bok/a/* ‘to flee’: Indo-European bheug-/bheg^u-* ‘to flee’ ~ Uralic pok-ta-, poke- ‘to flee’. Rejected.

Comment: The semantics are good, but the sound correspondences are not valid. Proto-Indo-European */g/ and */g^u/ do not go back to Proto-Nostratic */k/. Moreover, Proto-Nostratic */o/ does not become either */eu/ or */e/ in Proto-Indo-European.

16. bolʔi* ‘to grow (of plants)’: Hamito-Semitic ʔbl* ‘leaf, growing plant’ ~ Indo-European bhelh̥-/bhleh̥- ‘a plant, leaf, flower’ ~ Dravidian [poli-* ‘to grow, to bloom’]. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian evidence indicates that the Proto-Nostratic laryngeal was */γ/ and not */ʔ/.
2. Better Afrasian forms to compare are:

Proto-Afrasian bul-Vγ-* ‘to grow, to mature’: Proto-Semitic bal-aγ-* ‘to ripen, to mature, to attain puberty’ > Arabic balaġa ‘to reach, to arrive, to come, to attain puberty, to ripen, to mature’; Ḥarsūsi belōġ ‘to arrive’, bēleġ ‘to reach puberty, to be fully grown’; Mehri bēlāġ ‘to reach maturity, puberty’, bōleġ ‘grown up, adult’; Šḥeri / Jibbāli bēlāġ ‘to reach puberty’.

3. According to Bomhard (no. 65), the following Indo-European forms are to be compared here:

Proto-Indo-European bhulśh̥-/bholśh̥-, bhlośh̥-* > bh1ō-* (later also bh1ē-*) ‘to blossom, to sprout’: Greek φύλλον ‘leaf’; Latin folium ‘leaf’, flōs ‘a flower, blossom’; Old Irish bláth ‘flower’; Gothic blōma ‘flower’; Old Icelandic blóm ‘bloom, blossom, flower’, blað ‘leaf of a plant’; Old English blōwan ‘to bloom, to flower’, blēd ‘shoot, branch, fruit, flower’, blæd ‘leaf, blade’, blōstma ‘blossom, flower’; Old West Frisian blām ‘flower, bloom’; Old Saxon blōmo ‘flower, bloom’, blōian ‘to bloom’, blad ‘leaf, blade’; Dutch bloeien ‘to bloom’; Old High German bluoēn, bluojan ‘to bloom’ (New High German blühen), bluomo ‘flower, blossom’ (New High German Blume), bluot ‘flower, blossom, bloom’ (New High German Blüte), blat ‘leaf, blade’ (New High German Blatt); Tocharian A pält, B pilta ‘leaf’.

Proto-Nostratic root bul-* (~ bol-*):

Extended form:

(vb.) bul-V-γ-* ‘to ripen, to blossom, to bloom, to sprout, to mature’;

(n.) bul-γ-a* ‘increase, growth, ripening, maturity, prosperity, blossoming’

Derivative of:

(vb.) bul-* ‘to swell, to expand, to spread out, to overflow; to puff up, to inflate’;

(n.) bul-a* ‘large quantity or amount; expansion, spread, inflation; puff, blow’

17. [Descriptive] bongä* ‘fat; to swell’: Indo-European bhenǵh-* ‘fat, thick’ ~ Uralic puŋka/poŋka ‘fat, swelling’ ~ Dravidian poŋk-* ‘to swell, to boil over’ ~ (?) Altaic [boŋa* ‘fat, big’]. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root bun-* (~ bon-*):

(vb.) bun-* ‘to puff up, to inflate, to expand, to swell’;

(n.) bun-a* ‘rounded protuberance, swelling, lump, hump, growth’

Extended form:

(vb.) bun-V-g-* ‘to swell, to increase, to expand’;

(n.) bun-g-a* ‘swelling’; (adj.) ‘swollen, fat, thick’

Derivative:

(vb.) bun-* ‘to flow, to overflow’;

(n.) bun-a* ‘flow, flood’

18. bor’a* ‘brown, grey-brown’: Indo-European bher-, bhe-bhru-, bhreu-* ‘brown’ ~ Altaic bor’a* ‘brown’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European cognates should be reconstructed as follows: b^hor-, b^hru- (secondary e-grade form: b^her-* [in the Germanic words for ‘bear’; lengthened-grade /ē/* in the Lithuanian word for ‘brown’, bėras) ‘brown’ (< ‘dark-colored’), (reduplicated) b^he-b^hru-*.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:376) reconstruct Proto-Altaic bor^yV* (= bor^yV*) ‘gray’.

Proto-Nostratic bor^y-a* ‘(n.) a dark color; (adj.) dark, dark-colored.’

19. buHi* ‘to grow up, to arise’: Indo-European bheuH-* ‘to grow up; to become, to be’ ~ Uralic puŋe* ‘tree’ ~ Altaic büi-* ‘to be’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The laryngeal reconstructed by Illič-Svityč is actually an extension and is not part of the root.

2. According to Rédei (1986—1988:410—411), the Proto-Uralic form is to be reconstructed as puwe* ‘tree, wood’, while Sammallahti (1988:539) reconstructs Proto-Uralic pu/o/äxi/i* ‘tree’, Proto-Finno-Ugrian puxi*.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:342) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic biju* ‘to be, to sit’.

Proto-Nostratic root buw-* (~ bow-*):

(vb.) buw-* ‘to become, to arise, to come into being, to grow’;

(n.) buw-a* ‘growth, fullness, prosperity; blossom, bloom’

20. bula* ‘precipitation; mud’: Hamito-Semitic b(w)l* ‘to moisten, to dampen; to mix’ ~ (?) Indo-European bhl-endh-* ‘turbid; to mix’ ~ Altaic bula* ‘mud; to stir up, to mix’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Illič-Svityč has confused two different stems here. The Afrasian forms meaning ‘to moisten, to dampen’ should be removed from this etymology, while those meaning ‘to mix, to mix up, to confuse’ should be included. The forms meaning ‘to moisten, to dampen’ are to be derived from the following Proto-Nostratic forms (cf. Bomhard, no. 19):

Proto-Nostratic root bal-* (~ bəl-*):

(vb.) bal-* ‘to well up, to surge, to overflow, to pour over’;

(n.) bal-a* ‘outpour, downpour, surge, flow’

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:381—382) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic buli* ‘to stir, to shake, to smear’. They do not include forms meaning ‘mud’ in their etymology. They (2003:283—284) also reconstruct a separate stem (búla*) meaning ‘confusion, fright’.
3. The Proto-Indo-European cognate is to be reconstructed as follows:
bhl-en-dh-/*bhl-on-dh-/bhl-ŋ-dh- ‘to mix, to blend, to stir, to confuse’.

Proto-Nostratic root bul-* (~ bol-*):

(vb.) bul-* ‘to mix, to mix up, to confuse’;

(n.) bul-a* ‘mixture, confusion, turbidity, blur’

Derivative:

(n.) bul-a* ‘that which is dark, dark colored; that which has mixed colors, that which is spotted’

21. bura* ‘to bore’: Hamito-Semitic b(w)r* ‘to bore, to dig; opening’ ~ (?) Kartvelian [br(u)-* ‘to turn’] ~ Indo-European bher-* ‘to bore, to dig, to prick’ ~ Uralic pura* ‘instrument for boring; to bore, to hollow, to dig’ ~ (?) Dravidian pōḷ-* ‘opening’ ~ Altaic [bura-* ‘to turn, to bore’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. I am rating this etymology as “possible” rather than “strong” because of the faulty Dravidian and Kartvelian evidence cited by Illič-Svityč. To his credit, he puts a question mark before the material in question.
2. The Dravidian forms cited by Illič-Svityč should be removed and replaced with the following:

Tuḷu burma, burmu ‘a gimlet’, perepini ‘to bore, to perforate’, perevuni ‘to be bored, perforated’, berpuri ‘a borer’; Tamil purai ‘tubular hollow, tube, pipe, windpipe’.

3. The Proto-Kartvelian form should be removed. Instead, it goes better with the following Proto-Nostratic forms (cf. Bomhard, no. 72), of which the Proto-Nostratic forms meanings ‘to bore, to pierce’ are derivatives:

Proto-Nostratic root bur-* (~ bor-*):

(vb.) bur-* ‘to twist, to turn’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘twist, turn’

Derivatives:

(vb.) bur-* ‘to fight, to wrangle (over), to quarrel, to wrestle’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘fight, dispute, quarrel, battle, struggle’

(vb.) bur-* ‘to bore, to pierce’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘gimlet, borer, auger’

Proto-Nostratic root bur-* (~ bor-*):

(vb.) bur-* ‘to bore, to pierce’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘gimlet, borer, auger’

Derivative of:

(vb.) bur-* ‘to twist, to turn’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘twist, turn’

22. bur(H)Λ/bor(H)Λ ‘porous soil, dust’: Hamito-Semitic b(w)r/b(w)rH ‘porous soil, soil, sand, dust’ ~ (?) Kartvelian burγw-* ‘dust’ ~ Uralic pora* ‘dust, sand, dirt’ ~ Dravidian *pūr/*porɹ ‘porous soil, sand, dust’ ~ Altaic *bōr, *b/ū/r ‘porous soil, limestone, dust’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1964 and 1998) does not list the Proto-Kartvelian form cited by Illič-Svityč. Instead, he lists (1998:126) Proto-Kartvelian *mṭwer- ‘dust, whirlwind of dust’, which is clearly not related to the forms under discussion here. Likewise, the form in question is not listed in either Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995) or Fähnrich (2007).
 2. I could not find Proto-Uralic *pora ‘dust, sand, dirt’ in Rédei (1986—1988) or Sammallahti (1988). Collinder (1955:50 and 1977:68), on the other hand, lists the following: Finnish poro ‘hot ashes; coarse dust, rubble’ | [(?) Ostyak per, pār ‘ashes’ || Kamassian püre ‘sand, bed of sand’ | Koibal prja | Motor hura]. (Descriptive words ?)
 3. Proto-Dravidian */ɽ/ points to Proto-Nostratic */rʲ/.
 4. Dolgopolsky (2008:303—304, no. 234) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic *bōri/[y]U ‘loose earth, dust, (?) sand’.
 5. According to Bomhard (no. 75), some of the forms cited by Illič-Svityč here are to be included in the following etymology (no. 23) instead.
23. *burɹ ‘snow (sand) storm’: (?) Hamito-Semitic *bwr- ‘(sand) storm, wind’ ~ Indo-European *bher- ‘storm; to seethe’ ~ Uralic *pura- ‘whirl (of snow)’, *purka ‘blizzard’ ~ Altaic *burɹ/*bora ‘storm, blizzard’. Strong.

Comments:

1. As noted above, some of the forms cited by Illič-Svityč in the preceding etymology (no. 22) belong here.
2. Bomhard (no. 75) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European *bhur-/*bhṛ- ‘to move rapidly, to rage, to palpitate, to quiver’:

Proto-Indo-European *bhur-/*bhṛ- ‘to move rapidly, to rage, to quiver, to palpitate’: Sanskrit bhurāti ‘to move rapidly, to stir, to palpitate, to quiver, to struggle (in swimming)’, bhurváni-h ‘restless, excited’; Greek φῦρῶ ‘to mix’; Latin furō ‘to rage’; Old Icelandic byrr ‘fair wind’; Old English byre ‘strong wind, storm’; East Frisian bur ‘wind’; Middle High German burren ‘to rush, to roar, to whirr’; Armenian buṛn ‘violence’; Old Church Slavic burja ‘storm’.

3. The Proto-Indo-European forms meaning ‘to seethe’ or the like (*bherw-/*bhōrw-/*bhṛw-, *bhrew-/*bhrow-/*bhru- ‘to boil, to bubble up, to seethe’) do not belong here. Rather, they belong with the following etymology (no. 24).
4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:375—376) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *bōru (~ -a, -o) ‘dust, smoke, whirlwind’.

Proto-Nostratic root bur-* (~ bor-*):

(vb.) bur-* ‘to blow, to blow about, to whirl, to rage’;

(n.) bur-a* ‘storm, whirl, rage’

24. (Descriptive) bur'a* ‘to boil, to bubble up’: Hamito-Semitic br-* ‘to boil’ ~ Indo-European bhreu-* ‘to boil, to bubble up’ ~ Uralic pura-/pora- ‘to boil, to gurgle’ ~ Dravidian [pur-* ‘to boil’]. Strong.

Comment: We would expect Proto-Uralic r* (= /rʲ/*) here.

As a complement to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 26) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bər-*):

(vb.) bar-* ‘to swell, to puff up, to expand’;

(n.) bar-a* ‘swelling, bulge, increase’

(vb.) bar-* ‘to bristle (up), to stand on end’;

(n.) bar-a* ‘bristle, point, spike’

(vb.) bar- ‘to blow’;

(n.) bar-a* ‘wind’

(vb.) bar-* ‘to be thick, bushy, shaggy; to be coarse, rough, harsh’

(n.) bar-a* ‘roughness, coarseness, harshness; thickness, shagginess’; (adj.) ‘rough, harsh, coarse; thick, shaggy, bushy’

25. büKa* ‘to bend; bent’: Indo-European bheug-/bheugh- ‘to bend’ ~ Altaic bökä-* ‘to bend; bent’. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:360—361) reconstruct Proto-Altaic bükʲi* (= bükʲhi*) ‘to bow, to bend’. Proto-Altaic /kʲ/* (= /kʰ/) does not correspond to either Proto-Indo-European /g/ or /gh/*.

26. büri* ‘to cover’: Kartvelian bur-* ‘to cover, to darken’ ~ Dravidian pūr-* ‘to cover, to bury’ ~ Altaic büri-* ‘to cover’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:385—386) reconstruct Proto-Altaic büri* (~ -iū, -e) ‘to cover, to shade’.
2. Klimov (1964:55 and 1998:20) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian bur-* ‘to muffle up, to wrap up; to darken’.

3. The Proto-Dravidian form cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here — Proto-Dravidian */ɾ/ is derived from Proto-Nostratic */ɾʷ/. A better comparison would be with the following Dravidian forms:

Dravidian: Tamil pōr 'to wear, to wrap oneself in, to cover, to envelope, to surround', pōrvai 'covering, wrapping, upper garment, cloak, rug'; Telugu pōruva 'cloth'; Malayalam pōrkkuka 'to wrap, to cloak'; Koḍagu poraḍ- (poraḍuv-, poraḍ-) 'to dress (well)'; Kolami porkip- 'to cover, to close'; Naikṛi porkip- 'to cover, to close'; Gadba porege 'loincloth'; Gondi poriyā 'loincloth'; Koṇḍa porpa- 'to cover the body with a garment, to put on an upper garment'; Pengo por- 'to put on an upper garment, to wear round the shoulders'; Kuwi por- 'to wrap around myself, to wear (cloak)', porbi ki- 'to cover another', porvu 'a cover'; Kui porpa (port-) 'to wrap around the body, to put on an upper cloth'; Maṇḍa pur- 'to put on an upper garment'.

Proto-Nostratic root bur-* (~ bor-*):
 (vb.) bur-* 'to cover, to wrap up';
 (n.) bur-a* 'cover, covering'

27. (?) -b_l* suffix in the names of wild animals: Hamito-Semitic [-b/-ab suffix in the names of wild animals] ~ Indo-European -bh-* suffix in the names of wild animals. Rejected.
28. b_lǵ_l* 'sufficient, excessive': Hamito-Semitic bǵ* 'to be excessive' ~ Kartvelian beγ-* 'to be sufficient'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Lax semantics.
2. The Afrasian evidence presented by Illič-Svityč is questionable.

29. b_llH_l* 'to blow, to inflate': Kartvelian bēr-/bēl- 'to blow, to inflate' ~ Indo-European bhelh̄-/bhelh̄- 'to blow, to swell'. Possible.

Comment: Illič-Svityč confuses two separate stems in Kartvelian.

Proto-Nostratic root bal-* (~ bəl-*):
 (vb.) bal-* 'to well up, to surge, to overflow, to pour over';

(n.) bal-a* ‘outpour, downpour, surge, flow’

30. banʔa* ‘to tie, to bind’: Hamito-Semitic bnʔ* ‘to tie, to wrap’ ~ Indo-European bhendh-* ‘to tie’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Proto-Afrasian /t/* does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /dh/* (keeping Illič-Svityč’s transcription here). Consequently, this etymology cannot stand as written.
2. Hebrew ʔabnēt [אֲבִנֵּת] ‘girdle’ is most likely a loan from Egyptian (cf. Klein 1987:3).
3. Dolgopolsky (2008:280—281, no. 214) (erroneously) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic bænʔV* (~ bændV* ?) ‘to tie’.

Proto-Nostratic root ban-* (~ bən-*):

Extended form:

(vb.) ban-V-d-* ‘to tie, bind, fasten, or twist (together)’;

(n.) ban-d-a* ‘tie, bond’

Note: Only the extended form is attested in the daughter languages.

31. barKa* ‘knee’: Hamito-Semitic brk* ‘knee’ ~ Kartvelian [bʔg* ‘knee’]. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

32. bara* ‘child’: Hamito-Semitic br-* ‘child’ ~ (?) Kartvelian [ber-* ‘child’] ~ Indo-European bher-* ‘child’. Strong.

Note: The Afrasian form is taken from Kaiser (1990:140). It is missing in the original (Illič-Svityč 1971—1984.1:194—195, no. 32), though it is present in Illič-Svityč’s earlier work (1965:361).

Proto-Nostratic root bar-* (~ bər-*):

(vb.) bar-* ‘to bear children, to give birth’;

(n.) bar-a* ‘child’

33. calu* ‘to split, to cut’: Hamito-Semitic sl-* ‘to split, to cut, to point’ ~ Kartvelian cel-* ‘to mow, to cut’ ~ Indo-European (s)kel-* ‘to split’ ~ Uralic sale-* ‘to cut, to split’ ~ Dravidian cal- ‘to split, to cut’ ~ Altaic čalu-* ‘to cut’. Possible.

Comments: Proto-Indo-European (s)kel-* ‘to split’ must be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root chal-* (~ chəl-*):

(vb.) chal-* ‘to cut, to split, to cleave, to break off or apart’;

(n.) chal-a* ‘cut, crack, split; stroke, blow’

Derivative:

(n.) chal-a* ‘part, piece, chip, fragment’

34. cujha* ‘thorn’: Kartvelian cxw-* ‘thorn, point’ ~ Indo-European skuei(H)-* ‘thorn’ ~ (?) Dravidian cī-* ‘thorn’ ~ Altaic čüjā* ‘thorn point’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Altaic material cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:432) derive it from Proto-Altaic čipV* (= čhipV*) ‘sharp edge, peg’.
3. Proto-Indo-European skuei(H)-* ‘thorn’ must also be removed.
4. Dravidian cī-* ‘thorn’ is not related to Kartvelian cxw-* ‘thorn, point’.

35. (Descriptive) cura/cora ‘to drip’: Kartvelian cwar-/cur- ‘to drip, to drop’ ~ (?) Uralic čora* ‘to drip, to flow’ ~ Dravidian cōr-/cūr- ‘to drip, to flow’ ~ Altaic čur(ʌ)-* ‘to drip, to flow’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:404—405) reconstruct Proto-Altaic čúrka* (~ -jō-) ‘swift, stream, current’ with initial /č/. Proto-Altaic /č/ is derived from a Proto-Nostratic ejective. Hence, the Proto-Nostratic form should be reconstructed accordingly (see below).
2. The Kartvelian forms cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here.
3. According to the reconstruction of the Proto-Uralic consonant system proposed by Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 8), Proto-Uralic čora* should be reinterpreted as ʋorʌ-* ‘to run, to flow’ (cf. Bomhard, no. 276; see also Rédei 1986—1988:40).

Proto-Nostratic root tʷor-*:

(vb.) tʷor-* ‘to run, to flow’;

(n.) tʷor-a* ‘running, flowing’; (adj.) ‘speedy, swift’

36. (?) cAtA* ‘to cover’: Hamito-Semitic [str/štr ‘to cover (clothe), to protect’] ~ Indo-European (s)kēd-* ‘to cover (clothe)’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

37. čājha* ‘to glimmer, to twinkle’: Hamito-Semitic š(j)h* ‘light, bright’ ~ Indo-European skēih-* ‘to glimmer, to shine weakly; shadow’ ~ Uralic šäjä* ‘to glimmer, to shine’ ~ Dravidian [cāj* ‘luster, shine’]. Rejected.

Comment:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.

2. The Proto-Dravidian form should be glossed as ‘brilliance, light, beauty, color, etc.’ (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:215, no. 2457).

38. (?) čAWA* ‘to scream, to talk’: Hamito-Semitic šw-* ‘to scream’ ~ Kartvelian [čw-* ‘to say’]. Rejected.

Comment: Contradictory root structures.

39. Cali* ‘to tie around, to tie to’: Uralic solme* ‘knot’ ~ Altaic čali-* ‘to tie around, to hook’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic vowels do not match.

2. Proto-Uralic /ś/* does not correspond to Proto-Altaic /č/* (cf. Illič-Svityč 1971—1984.1:148 — faulty sound correspondences; for more accurate correspondences, cf. Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 12, table of Nostratic sound correspondences, and vol. 2 for supporting examples).

40. (?) CurA* ‘herd (wild animals)’: Hamito-Semitic s(w)r/šwr ‘herd (wild animals)’ ~ Uralic šurA* ‘herd of deer’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

41. (Descriptive) čap’a* ‘to beat, to chop’: Hamito-Semitic [sP-* ‘to beat, to hit’] ~ Indo-European skēp-* ‘to split’ ~ Uralic čappa-* ‘to chop, to beat’ ~ Dravidian [cava-* ‘to chop’] ~ Altaic čap(a)-* ‘to beat, to chop’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
 2. The Proto-Dravidian form should be glossed 'to cut down, to cut off, to strip off' (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:210, no. 2390).
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:416—417) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic *č'ǎp'a (~ -u, -i) (= *č'hǎp^ha) 'to chop, to hit'. This may correspond to Proto-Uralic *čappa- 'to chop, to beat'. Hence, the rating "weak" rather than total rejection.
42. *čina 'to know': Hamito-Semitic *s(j)n 'to know' ~ Kartvelian *c₁an-/ *c₁n- 'to know'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

43. *čuHλ 'to look': Kartvelian *c₁ew-/ *c₁aw-/ *c₁w- 'to look after, to guard' ~ Indo-European *(s)keuH- 'to look' ~ Dravidian *cū-(r-) 'to look'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

44. *čela 'to jump': (?) Hamito-Semitic *sl- 'to jump' ~ Indo-European *(s)kel- 'to jump' ~ Uralic *čelλ- 'to jump' ~ (?) Dravidian [*cEl-ai 'source, waterfall'] ~ Altaic [*č'e/λλ 'to limp, to stumble']. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences; lax semantics.

45. *ča adjectival and diminutive formant: Indo-European *-i-sk- adjectival and diminutive suffix ~ Uralic -ca/-cä adjectival and diminutive suffix ~ Altaic -ča/-čä diminutive suffix. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences; faulty analysis of derivational morphology.
 2. Cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:173—220), Robbeets (2015), and Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 18, §18.9) for details on Altaic derivational morphology.
46. (Descriptive) *ČaḲλ 'to tickle': Uralic *čik(k)λ 'to tickle' ~ Dravidian *cakk- / *čank- 'to tickle' ~ (?) Altaic [*čik-/ *čakλ- 'to tickle']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — the vowels do not match.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003) do not have an entry in their Altaic dictionary listing/discussing the Tungusic material cited by Illič-Svityč.

47. Car* ‘hardened crust’: Indo-European sker-* ‘(ice) crust, scab’ ~ Uralic car* ‘(hardened) film’ ~ Dravidian car* ‘rough’ ~ Altaic čar*(l) ‘hardened crust’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003) do not have an entry in their Altaic dictionary listing/discussing the Altaic material cited by Illič-Svityč.

Bomhard (no. 269) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root tʷar-* (~ tʷər-*):

(vb.) tʷar-* ‘to be rough, coarse, rigid, stiff, hard’;

(n.) tʷar-a* ‘that which is rough, coarse, rigid, stiff, hard’; (adj.) ‘rough, coarse, rigid, stiff, hard’

Derivative of:

(vb.) tʷar-* ‘to be or become stuck, joined, or bound together; to be firmly or strongly attached’;

(n.) tʷar-a* ‘firmness, solidity, strength’; (adj.) ‘firm, solid, strong, steadfast’

48. Či* formant of frequentive and iterative verbs: Indo-European -sk-* suffix of iterative/intensive forms of the verb ~ Uralic -če-* suffix of frequentive verbs ~ Altaic -či-* suffix of intensive-iterative verbs. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences; faulty analysis of derivational morphology.
 2. The Proto-Indo-European form cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. It corresponds in neither form nor function. For example, in Hittite, the verbal suffix -ške/a- is used to mark imperfective aspect, in addition to iterativity and habitual action, to name its most important functions (cf. Hoffner—Melchert 2008:318—322).
 3. Cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:173—220), Robbeets (2015), and Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 18, §18.9) for details on Altaic derivational morphology. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:198) reconstruct a Proto-Altaic -čʰ-* (= -čh-*) verbal intensive, usually denominative, but also deverbative suffix.
 4. Though comparable in form, the Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic suffixes have different functions. Hence, this entry must be disqualified.
49. Čimpa* ‘curved, bent’: Indo-European *(s)Kemb- ‘curved’ ~ Uralic čimpa* ‘bent, curved’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

50. *čiru 'pus, slush': Hamito-Semitic *t(j)r 'moist, feces' ~ Indo-European *(s)ter- 'slush, pus, feces' ~ Altaic *čirü- 'rot, decay'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences; lax semantics.

51. *čüŋ_Λ 'smell, odor': Hamito-Semitic *t(w)n/*t(j)n 'smell' ~ Uralic *čüŋ_Λ 'smell, odor, smoke'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences; faulty Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

52. (?) *čAda 'to beat': Kartvelian *čēd-/*čād- 'to nail, to forge' ~ Dravidian *caṭṭ- 'to beat, to destroy'. Strong.

Bomhard (no. 264) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian and Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic root *tʷad- (~ *tʷəd-):

(vb.) *tʷad- 'to strike, to beat, to pound, to hammer';

(n.) *tʷad-a 'hammer'

53. *čAr_Λ 'to cut': Hamito-Semitic *tʷr- 'to cut, to split; sharp stone' ~ Kartvelian *čer-/*čar- 'to cut, to chop' ~ Dravidian car- 'to tear apart, to split apart'. Strong.

Bomhard (no. 271) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Elamite, Kartvelian, Uralic, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root *tʷar- (~ *tʷər-):

(vb.) *tʷar- 'to cut, to split';

(n.) *tʷar-a 'cut, split, rip, tear; damage'; (adj.) 'cut, split, ripped, torn'

54. (?) *čäm_Λ 'astringent': Hamito-Semitic *šm- 'bitter, astringent, sour', *sm- 'bitter, poison' ~ Uralic *čäm_Λ 'sour'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

Bomhard (no. 334) has proposed an alternative Nostratic etymology based upon evidence from (?) Afrasian, Kartvelian, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) *žem-a 'anything that is sour, bitter, pungent, sharp'; (adj.) 'sour, bitter, pungent, sharp':

- A. (?) Afrasian: Semitic: Akkadian (reduplicated) zimzimmu (zinzimmu) ‘a type of onion’, probably ‘red onion’.
- B. Proto-Kartvelian žm-* ‘salt’: Georgian [ʒm-] ‘salt’; Mingrelian žimu- ‘salt’; Laz (n)žumu- ‘salt’; Svan žəm-, žim- ‘salt’. Proto-Kartvelian žm-ar-* ‘vinegar’: Georgian žm-ar-i ‘vinegar’; Mingrelian [žimol-] ‘vinegar’; Laz žumori ‘vinegar’; Svan žimar- (?) ‘vinegar’.
- C. Uralic: Proto-Finno-Ugrian čemэ* ‘sour; to become sour’ > Votyak / Udmurt šōm ‘taste, leaven’; Zyrian / Komi šom ‘leaven, sourness’; Ostyak / Xanty (North Kazym) šim-, (Tremyugan) čim-, (Obdorsk) šim- ‘to turn sour (dough), to rise, to ferment, to get spoiled, to rot from humidity (of garment or rope)’.

55. (Descriptive) čikʌ* ‘to cut’: Kartvelian čečk-* ‘to cut (finely)’ ~ Altaic [čikʌ-* ‘to cut, to chop’]. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:427) reconstruct Proto-Altaic čʰkʰá* (= čʰkʰhá*) ‘to cut; cutting instrument’. Proto-Altaic */čʰ/ (= */čʰh/) (aspirated) does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian */čʰ/ (= */čʰʰ/) (ejective), and Proto-Altaic */kʰ/ (= */kʰh/) (aspirated) does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian */kʰ/ (= */kʰʰ/) (ejective). Hence, this etymology must be disqualified.

56. čira* ‘to look after, to guard’: Hamito-Semitic tr-/sr-* ‘to look, to guard, to take care of’ ~ Kartvelian čir-* ‘care, need’ ~ Indo-European ster-g-, ster-k- ‘to guard, to love’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form must be removed due to faulty sound correspondences and lax semantics.
 2. Klimov (1998:322) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian čir-* ‘need, plague’. He notes: “At the same time it forms the basis of the secondary verb stem čir-* ‘to need; to suffer a misfortune’.
 3. This etymology must be rejected due both to faulty sound correspondences and to dubious semantics.
57. čʌsmʌ* ‘to eat’: Hamito-Semitic šm* ‘to eat’ / šm* ‘to taste’ ~ Kartvelian čām-/čēm-* ‘to eat’. Rejected.

Comment: According to Klimov (1998:319—320), the Proto-Kartvelian form is to be reconstructed as čām-* : čm-* ‘to eat’, while Fähnrich (2007:664—665) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian čām-*. Neither Klimov nor Fähnrich reconstruct a long vowel. This greatly reduces the probability that the Afrasian and Kartvelian forms are related.

58. ČalHa* 'wide': Indo-European stelh-* 'wide' ~ Altaic [čāl(a)* 'wide, expansive']. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

59. da* locative particle: Hamito-Semitic da* particle with locative meaning ~ Kartvelian da* (with pronouns), *-d/*-ad (with nouns) suffix of directive/adverbial case ~ Indo-European *-D/*-eD suffix of ablative case (pronominal and o-stems) ~ Uralic *-δa/ *-δä suffix of ablative (pronominal and adverbial stems) ~ Dravidian *-ttu/*-tt(ɿ) postpositional particle with locative-ablative meaning ~ Altaic *-da/*-dä, *-du/*-dü formant of locative cases. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed. The suffix of the ablative case (pronominal and o-stems) is now thought to have arisen from the incorporation of an adverb H₁éti* into the thematic declension: *-ō/ē-t < *-*o/e-+H₁ét(i) (cf. Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 19, §19.6).
2. The Proto-Uralic form should be removed. Proto-Uralic */δ/ is not a reflex of Proto-Nostratic */d/.

Proto-Nostratic relational marker da-* (~ də-*) 'along with, together with, in addition to':

- A. Proto-Afrasian da*, di* 'along with, together with, in addition to': Berber: Kabyle d, yid, id- 'with, together with, and'; Tamazight (Ayt Nahir) d 'with, and'; Tuareg d, əd 'and, with together with'; Nefusa əd, did 'and, with'; Ghadames əd, did 'and, with'; Zenaga əd, id, d 'and with'; Mzab əd, did 'and, with'. Central Cushitic: Bilin comitative case suffix -dī 'together with'; Quara -dī 'together with'. Highland East Cushitic: Burji -ddi locative suffix (with absolute case) in, for example, miná-ddi 'in the house'. Proto-Chadic də-* 'with, and' > Hausa dà 'with; and; by, by means of; regarding, with respect to, in relation to; at, in during; than'; Kulere tu; Bade də; Tera ndə; Gidar di; Mokulu ti; Kanakuru də. Note: Diakonoff (1988:61) reconstructs comitative-dative case endings *-dV and *-Vd for Proto-Afrasian based upon evidence from Cushitic (Agaw) and Berber-Libyan.
- B. Proto-Kartvelian da* 'and': Georgian da 'and'; Mingrelian do, ndo 'and'; Laz do 'and'.
- C. Elamo-Dravidian: Royal Achaemenid Elamite, Neo-Elamite da (also -da in -be-da, e-da, ku-da, etc.) 'also, too, as well, likewise; so, therefore, hence, consequently, accordingly; thereby, thereupon'. Note also: Middle Elamite, Neo-Elamite tak 'also' (< da- 'also' + a-ak 'and').

- D. Proto-Indo-European -d^he*, -d^hi* suffixed particle: Sanskrit sa-há (Vedic sa-dha) 'with', i-há 'here' (Prakrit i-dha), kú-ha 'where?', á-dhi 'above, over, from, in'; Avestan iða 'here', kudā 'where?'; Greek locative particle -θι, in, for example, οἴκο-θι 'at home', πό-θι 'where?'; Old Church Slavic къ-de 'where?', съ-de 'here'.
- E. Proto-Altaic dative-locative particle da*: Tungus: Manchu dative-locative suffix -de. The locative suffix is -du in other Tungus languages. Common Mongolian dative-locative suffix -da* > Mongolian -da; Dagur -da; Khalkha -dv; Buriat -da; Kalmyk -dv; Moghol -du; Ordos -du; Monguor -du. Regarding the -du variant, Greenberg (2000:156) notes: "It seems probable that the vowel here has been influenced by the dative-allative ru..." Common Turkic (except Yakut) locative suffix -da/-dä > Old Turkic locative-ablative suffix -dA; Chagatay locative suffix -DA; Turkish locative suffix -DA; Azerbaijani locative suffix -da; Turkmenian locative suffix -da; Tatar locative suffix -DA; Bashkir locative suffix -DA; Kazakh locative suffix -DA; Noghay locative suffix -DA; Kirghiz locative suffix -DA; Uzbek locative suffix -Dä; Uighur locative suffix -DA. Turkish da, de (also ta, te) 'and, also, but'.
- F. Proto-Chukchi-Kamchatkan instrumental case marker -tæ* and the suffix -tæ* in the comitative 1 case marker kæ- -tæ* 'together with' (both class 1). Perhaps also Proto-Chukotian to* 'and' > Koryak to 'and'; Alyutor tu (Palana to) 'and'.
60. daHΛ* intensifying and conjoining particle: Hamito-Semitic dH* 'and, also' ~ Kartvelian da* 'and' ~ Altaic dā* 'also, but, and'. Rejected.

Comment: This cannot be separated from the preceding entry (no. 59).

61. daKa* 'nearby' ~ Hamito-Semitic dk* 'nearby' ~ Uralic taka* 'back, rear', taka-na* 'from behind' ~ Altaic daka-/daga- 'close; to approach, to follow'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:456) reconstruct Proto-Altaic dǎgá* 'near; to follow'. Proto-Altaic /g/* does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian /k/*.
2. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč is problematic. No single Proto-Afrasian form can be reconstructed which can account for all of the forms found in the daughter languages.

62. dalq/u/* ‘a wave’: Hamito-Semitic dlx* ‘to upset, to stir up’ ~ (?) Indo-European [dhelH-* (with suffix) ‘sea’] ~ Dravidian talla* ‘upset’ ~ Altaic d/ā/lu-/ dōli ‘wave’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed. The only supporting evidence that Illič-Svityč cites is Greek θάλασσα ‘sea’, and this is rightfully seen to be of Pre-Greek origin (cf. Beekes 2010.I:530; Boisacq 1950:331; Chantraine 1968—1980.II:420; Frisk 1970—1973.I:648—649) and not inherited from Proto-Indo-European. Thus, there is no justification for reconstructing Proto-Indo-European dhelH-* ‘sea’.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:459) reconstruct Proto-Altaic dāla* ‘wave, deep place’. Given the semantic range of the supporting evidence from the Altaic daughter languages cited by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak, the Altaic forms should probably not be included here. Moreover, the supporting evidence from the other Nostratic daughter languages points more to a semantic range similar to what is found in Semitic — nowhere is there a cognate meaning ‘wave’, and the same goes for Dravidian and Eskimo:

Proto-Semitic dal-ax-* ‘to stir up, to disturb, to roil (water), to agitate’ > Akkadian dalāhu ‘to stir up, to roil (water), to blur (eyes); to disturb; to become muddied, roiled, blurred; to be or become troubled, confused, embarrassed’, dalhu ‘disturbed, blurred, muddy, cloudy, confused’, dilih̄tu ‘disturbed condition, confusion, distress’; Hebrew dālah ‘to trouble, to make turbid’; Syriac dālah ‘to trouble, to disturb’; Harari dālāha ‘to sin, to err, to go astray, to miss the way’; Gurage (Masqan, Gogot) dälla, (Wolane, Zway) dāla ‘to make a mistake, to be mistaken, to err, to lose the way, to miss the way’.

Proto-Nostratic root dal-* (~ dəl-*):

- (vb.) dal-* ‘to stir up, to disturb, to roil (water), to agitate; to be disturbed, confused, agitated, troubled’;
 (n.) dal-a* ‘disturbance, agitation’

Note also:

- (vb.) dul-* ‘to disturb, to perplex, to bewilder, to confuse, to ruffle, to upset, to baffle, to stir up trouble, to agitate; to be disturbed, perplexed, bewildered, confused, ruffled, upset, baffled, troubled, agitated’ (> ‘to drive someone crazy, mad, insane; to be crazy, mad, insane; to be dumb, stupid’);
 (n.) dul-a* ‘confusion, disturbance, trouble, agitation, perplexity’ (> ‘madness, craziness, insanity; stupidity’)

63. danga* ‘to cover’: Hamito-Semitic dm-* ‘to cover, to close, to press’ ~ Indo-European dhengh-* ‘to cover, to press’ ~ Uralic taŋa/taŋe ‘to cover’. Weak.

Comment: There are problems with this etymology. The Afrasian forms cited by Illič-Svityč can only belong here if we assume that the unextended Proto-Nostratic form is to be reconstructed as dam-* ‘to cover’. This would mean that the Proto-Indo-European form is to be derived from an extended form dam-g-* > (with assimilation of m* to n* [ŋ] before g*) dan-g-. But then, this raises questions about the Uralic material. The Proto-Uralic -/ŋ-/ reconstructed by Illič-Svityč does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian -/m-/*, unless we assume that the same developments took place as in Proto-Indo-European but with the subsequent loss of the velar. However, this is all extremely speculative. In fact, there is really no evidence for such a development.

64. dEwHi* ‘to shake, to blow’: Indo-European dheuH-* ‘to shake, to blow’ ~ Altaic dEbi-* ‘wave, blow’. Rejected.

Comment: This etymology cannot stand as written. Proto-Altaic /b/* does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /u/* or /ɯ/* [w].

Proto-Nostratic root duw-* (~ dow-*):

(vb.) duw-* ‘to blow about, to fly about, to scatter; to be blown, strewn, or scattered about’;

(n.) duw-a* ‘anything blown, sprinkled, scattered, or strewn about: smoke, steam, vapor; rain, shower, drizzle, raindrops; dust’; (adj.) ‘blown about, sprinkled, scattered, strewn’

65. -di* suffix of past tense forms: Kartvelian -di* suffix of imperfect ~ Dravidian -/tt-/-t- suffix of preterit ~ Altaic -di* suffix of preterit. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — we would expect the Dravidian suffix to be -/tt-/~ -/t-/~ were it truly comparable to the other suffixes under consideration here. Thus, the Dravidian forms must be removed.
2. Klimov (1964:67), Fähnrich (2007:119), and Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995: 96—97) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian -d* passive suffix.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:236) do not reconstruct Proto-Altaic -di* suffix of preterit.
4. At the end of this entry, Illič-Svityč mentions the Germanic preterit suffix -da* (found, for example, in Gothic lagi-da, Old Icelandic lagþa, and Old High German legi-ta), though he marks it as questionable. Indeed, it is questionable — it does not belong here.

66. (?) (Descriptive) did* 'big': Hamito-Semitic d(j)d* 'big, fat' ~ Kartvelian did-* 'big'. Weak.

Comment: Neither Ehret (1995) nor Orël—Stolbova (1995) reconstruct Proto-Afro-asiatic d(j)d* 'big, fat'. Moreover, the Afrasian evidence (exclusively from Chadic and Cushitic) cited by Illič-Svityč is problematic — the vowels do not match, which makes it difficult to reconstruct a common Afrasian proto-form.

Proto-Nostratic root did-* (~ ded-*):

(vb.) did-* 'to swell, to rise';

(n.) did-a* 'prominence, protuberance'; (adj.) 'swollen, raised'

67. diga* 'fish': Hamito-Semitic [d(j)g* 'fish'] ~ Indo-European dhǵh-u-H* 'fish' ~ Altaic [/d/iga-* 'fish']. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Semitic evidence points to Proto-Semitic dag-* 'fish':

Proto-Semitic dag-* 'fish' > Hebrew dāγ 'fish', dāγāh 'fish', dawwāγ 'fisherman'; Ugaritic dg 'fish', dgy 'fisherman' (cf. Klein 1987:114; D. Cohen 1970— .3:216). The forms with medial /w/ ~ /y/ are derivatives.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:477) reconstruct Proto-Altaic d̄iagi* (~ -jo-) 'fish'.
3. Dolgopolsky (1998:61—62, no. 74) (erroneously) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic doTgiHU* 'fish'.

Bomhard (no. 163) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, and Altaic (note: both Illič-Svityč and Bomhard agree on the reconstruction of the Nostratic proto-form and on the evidence adduced from the Nostratic daughter languages to support such a reconstruction):

Proto-Nostratic (n.) dig-a* 'fish'.

68. dila* ‘sunlight’: (?) Kartvelian [dila* ‘morning’] ~ Indo-European dhel-* ‘sun, bright, light’ ~ Altaic dila* ‘sun, solar year’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian evidence adduced by Bomhard points to Proto-Nostratic medial */-ly-/. If the Dravidian evidence belongs here, then the Altaic evidence must be excluded. Here is the Dravidian evidence:

Tamil teḷi ‘to become clear, limpid (as water by settling of sediment), serene (as the mind); to be bright (as the countenance), to become white; to disappear (as famine, epidemic); to become obvious, evident; to consider, to investigate, to understand’, teḷir ‘to shine, to sparkle’; Malayalam teḷi ‘cleanness, brightness’, teḷivu ‘cleanness, brightness, perspicuity, proof’, teḷiyuka ‘to become clear, to brighten up, to please, to be decided (a matter)’; Kannaḍa tīḷi, tālī ‘to become clear, pellucid, pure, bright; to brighten up; to be exhilarated or pleased; to be calmed; to cease (as sleep, a swoon); to come to light; to be or become plain or known; to know, to perceive, to learn’; Telugu teḷi ‘white, pure’.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:475) reconstruct Proto-Altaic d̥ilo* ‘year; sun, sun cycle’. The Altaic evidence adduced by Illič-Svityč points to Proto-Nostratic medial */l/. If the Altaic evidence belongs here, then the Dravidian evidence must be excluded. In fairness, the case for including the Altaic evidence is stronger.

Proto-Nostratic root dilʷ-* (~ delʷ-*):
 (vb.) dilʷ-* ‘to shine, to be or become bright’;
 (n.) dilʷ-a* ‘daylight, morning’

Note: As noted above, the case for including the Altaic evidence is stronger. This means that Illič-Svityč’s reconstruction of the Nostratic proto-form is to be preferred: dil-a*.

69. diqA* ‘soil’: Kartvelian diqa* ‘soil, clay’ ~ Indo-European dhghem-* ‘soil’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences: Proto-Kartvelian */i/ does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European */e/, which must be reconstructed for the Indo-

European proto-form based upon the Hittite evidence (cf. Wodtko—Irslinger—Schneider 2008:86—99 dhéǵh-om-*, etc.).

2. According to Klimov (1964:94—95 and 1998:72), the Proto-Kartvelian form is to be reconstructed as tīqa-* ‘soil, clay’. Klimov assumes that Proto-Kartvelian */t-/ has become /d-/ in Mingrelian and Laz through dissimilation. However, Illič-Svityč assumes the opposite, that is, that Proto-Kartvelian */d-/ has become /t-/ in Georgian through assimilation. Illič-Svityč’s interpretation is the more plausible.
3. According to Bomhard (no. 167), Proto-Kartvelian diqa* ‘soil, clay’ is descended from the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and Indo-European, in addition to Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic root dīq^h-* (~ deq^h-*):

- (vb.) dīq^h-* ‘to crush, to pound or tamp (earth), to mold or knead (clay)’;
 (n.) dīq^h-a* ‘earth, clay, mud’

4. According to Bomhard (no. 146), Proto-Indo-European dhēǵh-om-, dhǵh-om- ‘earth, land, ground; human being’ is descended from the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, (?) Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Uralic, in addition to Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic root dag-* (~ dəg-*):

- (vb.) dag-* ‘to put, to place, to put in place; to be put in place, to be stable, to be firmly established’;
 (n.) dag-a* ‘place’

5. Bomhard (no. 146) also notes that the following Kartvelian forms have been borrowed from Indo-European: Georgian (dial.) dil(l)γvam ‘black earth’, (toponym) Diyom a region inside Tbilisi, occupying the so-called “Diyomian Field”; Svan diγwam ‘black earth’.

70. dīga* ‘bright, light’: Kartvelian *(s₁a-)dγ-e ‘day’ ~ Indo-European dheih-* / dhjeh-* ‘to see’. Rejected.

Comment: Proto-Kartvelian */γ/ does not correspond to a laryngeal in Proto-Indo-European.

Proto-Nostratic root dag-* (~ dəg-*):

- (vb.) dag-* ‘to glitter, to shine, to burn’;
 (n.) dag-a* ‘day’

Note: Bomhard includes the following Indo-European evidence:

Proto-Indo-European dʰogh-o-* ‘day’: Proto-Germanic daǰaz* ‘day’ > Gothic dags ‘day’; Old Icelandic dagr ‘day’; Swedish dag ‘day’; Norwegian dag ‘day’; Danish dag ‘day’; Old English dæg ‘day’; Old Frisian dei ‘day’; Old Saxon dag ‘day’; Old High German tag, tac ‘day’ (New High German Tag). Note: The following words for ‘yesterday’ should be considered here as well: Sanskrit hyás ‘yesterday’; Greek χθές ‘yesterday’.

71. duli* ‘fire’: Uralic tule* ‘fire’ ~ Dravidian tul-* ‘to shine, to spark’ ~ Altaic duli-* ‘to warm up; warm’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian evidence points to a Pre-Dravidian tuly-* ‘to shine, to sparkle’.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:480—481) reconstruct Proto-Altaic dju̯lu* ‘warm’.

Bomhard (no. 172) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root dul-* (~ dol-*):

(vb.) dul-* ‘to burn, to be bright, to warm, to heat up’;

(n.) dul-a* ‘heat, warmth, fire’

72. dul* ‘tip, extremity’: Kartvelian dud-* ‘tip, extremity’ ~ Uralic tudʰka* ‘tip, top’ ~ Dravidian tut* ‘extremity, tip’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is erroneous.
2. Proto-Uralic /δʰ/* does not correspond either to Proto-Kartvelian /d/* or to Dravidian /t/*. Consequently, the Uralic forms should be removed. The remaining parts of this etymology are mostly correct.
3. Proto-Dravidian tut-* ‘tip, point end’ is most likely derived from earlier tut-, through progressive assimilation: tut- > tut-. The earlier form is preserved in the reduplicated form tutta-tut- ‘the very end or extremity’ found in Kannada and Telugu.

Bomhard (no. 171) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian and Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) dud-a* ‘tip, point’.

73. dünga* 'to be peaceful, silent': Hamito-Semitic d(w)m* 'to be peaceful, silent' ~ Kartvelian [dum-* 'to be silent'] ~ Altaic düṅä* 'to sit quietly, to be silent'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1375—1376) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ijüm(k)u* 'silent, calm'. Accordingly, the Altaic material should be removed from this etymology.
2. With the removal of the Altaic material, the Proto-Nostratic form can be revised as follows: dum-* 'to be silent'.

Proto-Nostratic root dum-* (~ dom-*):

(vb.) dum-* 'to be silent';

(n.) dum-a* 'silence'

74. (?) dUrA* 'deaf': Hamito-Semitic d(w)r* 'deaf' ~ Kartvelian [dura* 'deaf']. Rejected.

Comment: The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč is extremely problematic.

75. dAʕA* 'to lay': Hamito-Semitic dʕ* 'to lay' ~ Kartvelian d-* 'to lay' ~ Indo-European dheh-* 'to lay, to stand'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Dolgopolsky (2008:491—492, no. 497) reconstructs diʕê* (~ dVHU*) 'to put, to place'.
2. Proto-Afrasian /ʕ/ does not correspond to the Proto-Indo-European laryngeal commonly reconstructed for this form: d^{he}ʔ- (= dheH₁-, dheʔ₁-, d^heh₁-/dheh₁-, etc.) (cf. Rix 2001:136—138 d^heh₁-; Watkins 2000:17 dheʔ₁-; Mallory—Adams 1997:472 dheh₁-*).

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's (and Dolgopolsky's) etymology, Bomhard (no. 159) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Elamite, Indo-European, Etruscan, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root day-* (~ dəy-*):

(vb.) day-* 'to throw, to cast, to put, to place';

(n.) day-a* 'act, deed'

76. daw* ‘to be ill, to die’: Hamito-Semitic dw-* ‘to be ill, to die’ ~ Indo-European dheu-* ‘to die, to lose consciousness’. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root daw-* (~ dəw-*):

(vb.) daw-* ‘to become deathly sick, to be ill; to die’;

(n.) daw-a* ‘(deadly) disease, sickness; death’

77. ga*(Ha) ‘to take, to receive’: Kartvelian g-* ‘to acquire’ ~ Altaic ga-* ‘to take, to receive’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1998:24—25) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian g-* ‘to acquire, to gain, to win’.
2. The evidence from the Altaic daughter languages indicates that the Proto-Altaic form had a wider semantic range than indicated by either Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:525) or Illič-Svityč:

Proto-Altaic ga-* ‘to take, to take off, to take away; to let go, to leave; to put’: Proto-Tungus ga-* ‘to take’ > Manchu gai- ‘to take, to take away, to take off’; Spoken Manchu (Sibo) gia- ‘to take, to take away, to take off’; Evenki ga- ‘to take’; Lamut / Even ga- ‘to take’; Negidal ga- ‘to take’; Ulch ga- ‘to take’; Orok ga- ‘to take’; Nanay / Gold ga- ‘to take’; Oroch ga- ‘to take’; Udihe ga- ‘to take’. Proto-Turkic Ko-* (perhaps originally Ka-* but changed to Ko-* under the influence of the synonymous stem Kod-* ‘to put; to leave’) ‘to put; to let go; to leave’ > Turkish ko-, koy- ‘to put; to let go; to leave; to permit; to suppose’; Karaim qo- ‘to put; to leave’; Chuvash χiv-, χu- ‘to put; to leave’.

3. This etymology is rejected due to the irreconcilable semantic differences between the Kartvelian and Altaic material cited by Illič-Svityč. Any resemblance is purely fortuitous.

78. gara* ‘thorny branch, thorn’ ~ Indo-European gher-, gherh-/ghreh-* ‘thorn, point, branch’ ~ Uralic kara* ‘thorn, branch, conifer’ ~ Dravidian kar(a)-* ‘thorn, point’ ~ Altaic gara-* ‘point, branch, conifer’. Weak.

Comments:

1. The etymology of the Greek form (χάρμη = ἐπιδορατίς ‘tip, point of a lance, spear-head’) cited by Illič-Svityč is uncertain, though relationship to (Hesychius) χάρια· βουνός ‘hill’ and χοιράς ‘rocks (rising just above the sea) like a hog’s back’ is considered likely. The full complement of possible related Greek forms is as follows: χάρμη ‘tip, point of a lance, spear-head’, χοιράς (< χορ-ιαδ-*) ‘(adj.) of a hog; (n.) ‘a sunken rock; (pl.) scrofulous swellings in the glands of the neck’, χοιράς πέτραι ‘rocks (rising just above the sea) like a hog’s back’, χοῖρος (< χορ-ιο-*) ‘a young pig, a porker’, χοιραδ-ώδης ‘rocky’, χαρία· βουνός ‘hill’. Derivation from Proto-Indo-European g^her-* ‘to stick out, to protrude’ has been proposed. The Norwegian, Old High German, Slavic, and Tocharian forms cited by Illič-Svityč can also be derived from Proto-Indo-European g^her-* ‘to stick out, to protrude’, though there are some uncertainties here as well. This examination of the Indo-European material indicates that the semantic range assigned to the reconstructed Proto-Indo-European form by Illič-Svityč is far too narrow.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:531—532) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic gǎrʲ[ǎ]* (= gǎrʲ[ǎ]*) ‘sharp edge’ based upon slightly different evidence from the Altaic daughter languages than that cited by Illič-Svityč. Proto-Altaiic /-rʲ-/ (= -rʲ-/) implies Proto-Nostratic */-rʲ-/ . Some of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč are included by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak in their etymology, though the semantic range is broader.
3. Reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic /-rʲ-/ makes the Dravidian forms cited by Illič-Svityč questionable — we would expect kar(a)- instead. If we reconstruct the Proto-Nostratic form as garʲ-* ‘to stick out, to stand out, to jut out, to project, to protrude; to be or become erect, rigid, stiff’, as required by the Altaic evidence, then a better Dravidian comparison might be with the following:

Tamil kaṛal (kaṛalv-, kaṛanr-) ‘to produce, to bulge out, to pass through (as an arrow)’, kaṛalai ‘wen, tubercle, tumor’; Malayalam kaṛarūka ‘to protrude’, kaṛala ‘a swelling (chiefly in the groin)’; Kota kaṛv- (kaṛd-) ‘to be stretched, to protrude through a hole (for example, piles)’, kaṛt- (kaṛty-) ‘to make to protrude through a hole’; Tuḷu karalè ‘a swelling’; (?) Telugu koḍalu-konu ‘to swell, to rise, to increase’.

4. In like manner, reconstructing the Proto-Nostratic form as garʲ-* ‘to stick out, to stand out, to jut out, to project, to protrude; to be or become erect, rigid, stiff’ makes the Uralic evidence suspect. We would expect Proto-Uralic kaṛa* instead.

Proto-Nostratic root garʲ-* (~ gǎrʲ-*):

(vb.) garʲ-* ‘to stick out, to stand out, to jut out, to project, to protrude; to be or become erect, rigid, stiff’;

(n.) garʷ*- ‘tip, point, peak’

Identical to:

(vb.) garʷ*- ‘to swell, to increase, to grow’;

(n.) garʷ-a* ‘swelling, increase, growth; great quantity, abundance, excess’

79. gāndu* ‘male’: Dravidian kaṅṭ*- ‘male’ ~ Altaic gāndü* ‘male’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:541) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gentV* (~ k-) ‘male, self’. Bomhard (no. 378) accepts Street’s (1974:13) alternative Proto-Altaic reconstruction: gendü(n) ‘male; self’
2. Semantically, this is a very attractive etymology. However, the lack of agreement between the Dravidian and Altaic stem vowels is problematic.

Bomhard (no. 378) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian and Altaic, indicating uncertainty concerning the reconstruction of the stem vowel:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) g[e]n-d-a* ‘virility, strength; a male (human or animal)’

Here is the evidence cited by Bomhard (no. 378), with references:

- A. Dravidian: Tamil kaṅṭan ‘warrior, husband’, kaṅṭi ‘buffalo bull’, kaṅavan ‘husband’, keṅṭan ‘robust, stout man’, kiṅṭan ‘fat man, strong person’; Malayalam kaṅṭan ‘the male, especially of cat’, kaṅavan ‘husband’, kiṅṭan ‘big; a stout, bulky fellow’; Kota gaṅḍ ‘male’; Kannaḍa gaṅḍu ‘strength, manliness, bravery; the male sex, a male, man’, gaṅḍa ‘a strong, manly male person, a husband; strength, greatness’, gaṅḍiga ‘a valiant man’, gaṅḍasa, gaṅḍasu, gaṅḍusa, gaṅḍusu ‘male person’, gaṅḍike ‘prowess’, geṅḍā ‘husband’, geṅḍu ‘male’; Koḍagu kaṅḍē ‘male (of dogs and other animals, mostly wild; not of cats)’; Tuḷu gaṅḍu ‘male, valiant, stout’, gaṅḍusu ‘husband’, gaṅḍūkāyi, gaṅḍustana, gaṅḍastana ‘manliness’, kaṅḍaṇi, kaṅḍaṇye ‘husband’, gaṅṭē, gaṅṭapuccē ‘male cat’; Telugu gaṅḍu ‘bravery, strength, the male of the lower animals’, gaṅḍūdu, gaṅḍādu ‘a brave, strong man’; Malto geṅḍa ‘male’. Krishnamurti 2003:11 kaṅṭ-a-* ‘male’, 169 kaṅ-ṭV-* ‘warrior’, and 525 kaṅṭ-anṭu* ‘husband, warrior’; Burrow—Emeneau 1984:111, no. 1173. Dravidian loanword in Sanskrit gaṅḍā-, gaṅḍīra- ‘hero’ (cf. Mayrhofer 1956—1980.I:318). Perhaps also: Kota geṅḍ kaṭ- (kac-) ‘dog’s penis becomes stuck in copulation’; Kannaḍa keṅḍa ‘penis’; Gondi geṭānā, gēṭ- ‘to have sexual intercourse’, gēṭ ‘sexual intercourse’. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:177, no. 1949.
- B. Proto-Altaic gendV* (~ k-) ‘male, self’: Proto-Mongolian gendü ‘male of animals’ > Written Mongolian gendü(n) ‘small male panther; male of animals in general; male tiger’; Khalkha gendū ‘a male tiger or leopard’;

Buriat gende 'male sable'; Kalmyk gendŋ 'male of animals'. Proto-Turkic [g]entü (-nd-)* 'self' > Old Turkish (Orkhon, Old Uighur) kentü 'self'; Karakhanide Turkic kendü 'self'; Turkish kendi 'self'; Azerbaijani gendi 'self'; Yakut kini 'he'; Dolgon gini 'he'. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003: 541 gentV* (~ k-) 'male, self'; Poppe 1960:25; Street 1974:13 gendü(n) 'male; self'.

80. gäti* 'hand': Indo-European ghes-* 'hand' ~ (?) Uralic käte-* 'hand' ~ Dravidian kac-* 'hand'. Rejected.

Comment: Though the semantics are good, there are problems with the phonology — Proto-Indo-European /-s-/* does not correspond to Proto-Uralic /-t-/. In like manner, Proto-Dravidian /-c-/ does not correspond to Proto-Uralic /-t-/*. Consequently, this etymology must be abandoned.

Proto-Nostratic root gat'-* (~ gət'-*):
 (vb.) gat'-* 'to take (with the hand), to grasp';
 (n.) gat'-a* 'hand'

81. (?) gedi* 'nape of neck': Hamito-Semitic gd* 'nape of neck, backside' ~ Altaic gedi* 'nape of neck, backside'. Rejected.

Comment: The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč is problematic. No single Proto-Afrasian form can be reconstructed which can account for all of the forms found in the daughter languages. This indicates that the Afrasian forms cited by Illič-Svityč are probably chance resemblances, at best, and not cognates.

82. gE/hr/a* 'dawn': Hamito-Semitic ghr* 'sunlight, day' ~ Indo-European gherh-/ ghreh- 'to dawn, to shine' ~ Altaic gĒra* 'dawn, morning, light'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:531) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gari* (~ -r̄-, -o) 'light', with a range of meanings in the forms cited from the Altaic daughter languages as follows: 'ray, beam, light; to shine'.
2. Illič-Svityč cites disparate forms from the Afrasian daughter languages which are probably not cognates. These should be left out of consideration.

3. The Proto-Indo-European form is better reconstructed as ǵʰer-; extended forms: ǵʰr-éh₁/h₁-, ǵʰr-h₁ié-* — this reconstruction is taken from Rix 2001:177.
4. This leaves only Indo-European and Altaic. Based upon the evidence from these two branches, the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction should be revised as follows:

Proto-Nostratic root gar-* (~ gər-*):

(vb.) gar-* ‘to shine, to be bright’,

(n.) gar-a* ‘that which is shining, bright: ray, beam, light; sun; etc.’

5. This etymology is not in Bomhard (this book).
83. gil* ‘state of sickness, grief’: Kartvelian gl-* ‘grief, sorrow’ ~ Indo-European ǵh(e)l-* ‘sickness, loss’ ~ (?) Altaic [gil(a)* ‘to be ill, to be sad’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1964:63 and 1998:31) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian glo(w)-* ‘to grieve, to deplore’, while Schmidt (1962:101) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian gel-, and Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:86) and Fähnrich (2007:107—108) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian gl-.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:555) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gǰòlo* ‘to be unhappy, to endure’. The vowel of the first syllable is problematic. Hence, the Altaic material should be removed from this etymology.
3. Bomhard (no. 362) excludes the Altaic material but adds material from Semitic (Afrasian):

Proto-Semitic gal-aw-* ‘to ache, to be in pain, to be ill, to have a fever’ > Ḥarsūsi gēlew ‘to have a fever’, gōlew ‘fever’; Soqotri góle? ‘fever’; Mehri gēləw ‘to be ill, to have a fever, to have a short illness’, gōləw ‘fever’; Šheri / Jibbāli gīzi/ygól ‘to be ill, to have a fever’, góle? ‘fever’, gélé? ‘ill’. Tigre ǵele ‘weak, miserable’, ǵolāli gǵa? ‘to suffer pain (head, body), to have no power’; Amharic ag^wlalla ‘to mistreat, to inflict hardship on’.

Proto-Nostratic root gal-* (~ gəl-*):

(vb.) gal-* ‘to ache, to be in pain, to be ill, to suffer’;

(n.) gal-a* ‘ache, pain, disease, illness’

84. gi/ħu* ‘smooth and shiny’: Hamito-Semitic [glħ* ‘bald’] ~ (?) Kartvelian [glu-* ‘smooth’] ~ Indo-European ǵhelh^{u-}/ǵhle^{u-}* ‘shiny, of light color’, ǵhleḥ^u-dh-* ‘smooth, shiny’ ~ Dravidian [kī/ḥ/ḷ* ‘smooth and shiny’] ~ Altaic gilu-/gila-* ‘smooth and shiny’. Possible.

Comments:

1. It appears that Illič-Svityč has confused two different Proto-Nostratic stems here: (A) gil-* ‘to glide, to slip, to slide’ (reflexes in Kartvelian, Indo-European, and Uralic); and (B) gil-* ‘to shine, to glisten’ (reflexes in Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan) (see below).
2. The origin of the Semitic forms is unclear. They could have come from a stem meaning ‘bright, shiny’, from a stem meaning ‘smooth’, or from a stem meaning ‘to scratch, to scrape’, all of which have Nostratic antecedents. On the other hand, if the Beja / Beḏawye form cited by Illič-Svityč is a true cognate, it would point to an original initial labiovelar, /g^w-/*, which would make it impossible to include the Afrasian evidence in this etymology.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:544—545) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gilē* (~ -i, -o) ‘to shine, to glitter’.

Proto-Nostratic root gil-* (~ gel-*):

(vb.) gil-* ‘to glide, to slip, to slide’;

(n.) gil-a* ‘gliding, sliding’; (adj.) ‘smooth, slippery’

Bomhard (no. 567) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Indo-European, Uralic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root (Eurasian only) gil-* (~ gel-*):

(vb.) gil-* ‘to shine, to glisten’;

(n.) gil-a* ‘brilliance, shine’; (adj.) ‘shining, glistening, gleaming, brilliant’

85. goHjḷ* ‘sunlight, dawn’: Indo-European g^uheHi-* ‘light, bright’ ~ Uralic kojḷ* ‘dawn’ ~ (?) Altaic [gia-* ‘dawn’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:553—554) reconstruct Proto-Altaic giōḥu* (= giōḥ^u*) ‘dawn, daylight’. Clearly, this does not belong here.
2. According to Beekes (2010.II:1547), the etymology of Greek φαῖός ‘grey; dark grey, blackish’ is unknown. He rejects comparison with Lithuanian giēdras ‘clear’. However, he (2010.II:1544) accepts the comparison of Greek φαῖρός ‘bright, clear, cheerful, joyous’ with Lithuanian gaidrūs ‘bright, clear’, gaidrà ‘cloudless heaven, clear weather’, and giēdras ‘clear’. He posits derivation from Proto-Indo-European g^{wh}eh₂id-*.

3. Rédei (1986—1988:167) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian koje* ‘dawn, sunrise’, while Sammallahti (1988:543) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kōji* ‘dawn’. In terms of both phonology and semantics, it is difficult to reconcile this form with Proto-Indo-European g^wh₂id-*.

86. golHλ* ‘heart’: Kartvelian gul-* ‘heart’ ~ Altaic gōl(λ)* ‘core, middle, river source’. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:561) reconstruct Proto-Altaic goblu* ‘valley’ as the antecedent of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč: Proto-Mongolian gowl* ‘river; river valley; center (река; долина реки; центр)’; Proto-Turkic Kōl* ‘valley (долина)’.

87. gop’a* ‘empty’: Hamito-Semitic g^wP* ‘empty’ ~ (?) Kartvelian kwab-* ‘cave, hole’ ~ Indo-European geup-* ‘cavity, hole’ ~ Uralic koppa* ‘empty; skull’ ~ Altaic goba-/gobi- ‘empty; a hollow’. Rejected.

Comment: The sound correspondences do not work — Proto-Afrasian /g/* does not correspond to either Proto-Kartvelian /k(w)-/* or Indo-European /g-/* (= /k’-/* under the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism). Proto-Indo-European /-p-/* does not correspond to either Proto-Kartvelian /-b-/* or Proto-Altaic /-b-/*.

88. (?) gofrλ* ‘to search’: Hamito-Semitic g(w)fr* ‘to search’ ~ Kartvelian [gō/r-* ‘to search’]. Rejected.

Comment: The forms cited by Illič-Svityč from the Afrasian daughter languages cannot possibly all be related.

89. gu/nH/i* ‘think’: Kartvelian g^wān-/gōn- ‘to think, to recall’ ~ Altaic gūni-* ‘to think, to be sad’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1964:63—64 and 1998:31), Fähnrich (2007:109—110), and Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:87—88) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian gon-* ‘to think, to remember’.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:571—572) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gūno* ‘to think’.

Proto-Nostratic root gun-* (~ gon-*):
(vb.) gun-* ‘to perceive, to notice’;

(n.) gun-a* 'notice, memory, mind, perception, remembrance, recollection'

90. gurHa* 'antelope, male antelope': Hamito-Semitic g(w)rH* 'antelope, male antelope' ~ Dravidian kūr-* 'antelope, deer' ~ Altaic [gūra* 'male antelope']. Strong.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:574—575) reconstruct Proto-Altaic guri* (~ -o-, -r-, -e) 'deer, game'.

Proto-Nostratic root guw-* (~ gow-*):

(vb.) guw-* 'to hunt wild animals';

(n.) guw-a* 'wild animal, wild beast, game'; (adj.) 'wild, untamed'

Extended form:

(vb.) guw-V-r-* 'to hunt wild animals';

(n.) guw-r-a* 'wild animal, wild beast, game'; (adj.) 'wild, untamed'

Notes:

1. The unextended stem is preserved in Ancient Egyptian: gw '(wild) bull'.
2. The Afrasian (Cushitic and Chadic) and Indo-European forms are deverbatives: guw-V-r-*.

91. (Descriptive) gurA* 'to swallow': Hamito-Semitic g(w)r* 'to swallow; throat' ~ (?) Indo-European g^uerh^u-* 'to swallow' ~ Uralic kurkA* 'throat' ~ Dravidian kurA-* 'throat'. Possible.

Comment: The Afrasian evidence listed by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. Proto-Afrasian */g/ does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European */g^u/ (= */k^w- / under the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism). Rather, it corresponds to Proto-Indo-European */g^h/ (see the table of sound correspondences in Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 12). The Afrasian evidence should be replaced with the following Semitic forms:

Semitic: South Arabian: Šheri / Jibbāli kerd 'throat'; Ḥarsūsi ḳard 'throat'; Mehri ḳard 'voice, throat'.

Proto-Nostratic root q^wur-* (~ q^wor-*):

(vb.) q^wur-* 'to swallow';

(n.) q* 'wur-a 'neck, throat'

92. güpa* 'to bend': Hamito-Semitic g(w)b/k(w)P 'bend, protuberance' ~ Indo-European gheub-* 'bend, curved, crooked' ~ Altaic gübä-/göbä- 'bent, bulging'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The Indo-European form should be removed. Proto-Indo-European */b/ (= */p'/ under the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian */b/ or Altaic */b/ and is certainly not derived from Proto-Nostratic */p/.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:566—567) include the Mongolian forms cited by Illič-Svityč under the following: Proto-Altaic gōpʹi* (= gōpʹhi*) 'to beat, to hit'. Hence, the Altaic forms should also be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root gub-* (~ gob-*):

(vb.) gub-* 'to bend, to twist';

(n.) gub-a* 'that which is twisted, bent, curved: hunch, wattle'

93. gUjRä* 'wild beast': Indo-European ghuēr-* '(wild) beast' ~ Altaic [gōrā* 'wild']. Rejected.

Comment: This entry was discussed under no. 90 above.

94. gUlʹa* 'round, sphere': Hamito-Semitic g(w)l* 'round, sphere, head' ~ Kartvelian gwar-/gur- 'round; to roll' ~ (?) Indo-European ghel-* 'round outgrowth, head'. Rejected.

Comment: Proto-Kartvelian */ɾ/ does not correspond to either Proto-Afrasian */l/ or Proto-Indo-European */l/.

Proto-Nostratic root Gʷal-* (~ Gʷəl-*):

(vb.) Gʷal-* 'to curve, to bend, to roll; to be round';

(n.) Gʷal-a* 'round object: circle, globe, sphere, ball, etc.'

Derivative:

(n.) Gʷal-a* 'head, skull'

In addition, Bomhard (no. 586) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) Gwal-a* 'head, skull':

Derivative of:

(vb.) Gwal-* 'to curve, to bend, to roll; to be round';

(n.) Gwal-a* 'round object: circle, globe, sphere, ball, etc.'

95. gUrA* 'hot coals': Hamito-Semitic g(w)r* 'fire, coal' ~ Indo-European g^uher-* 'to burn; hot, hot coals' ~ (?) Altaic gur(A)-* 'hot coals; to catch fire'. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root g^wir-* (~ g^wer-*):

(vb.) g^wir-* 'to be or become hot, to warm';

(n.) g^wir-a* 'heat, fire'

96. (?) galpa* 'weak, feeble': Indo-European help-* 'weak' ~ (?) Kartvelian [γalp-* 'weak'] ~ Altaic [alba-* 'to be unable']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Proto-Indo-European */h/ does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian */γ/.
2. Proto-Altaic */b/ does not correspond to either Indo-European */p/ or Proto-Kartvelian */p/.

97. (?) garķu* 'to bend': Kartvelian γrek(w)-* 'to bend, to twist' ~ Indo-European herk^u-* 'bent, flexible'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Proto-Indo-European */h/ does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian */γ/.
2. There is absolutely no basis whatsoever for reconstructing a medial ejective */-k-/ (= */-k'-/) at the Nostratic level. The only reason for this reconstruction is an ad hoc sound law set up by Illič-Svityč. There is no evidence in the data cited by Illič-Svityč to support such a reconstruction. A methodologically rigorous approach to linguistic comparison demands strict adherence to established sound laws based upon the hard evidence provided by the languages being compared and avoidance of ad hoc proposals that ignore that evidence.

98. guru* 'to flow, to pour': Hamito-Semitic [g^wur* 'deep water'] ~ Kartvelian [γwar-/γwer-* 'to pour; flood'] ~ Dravidian ūr-* 'to melt, to fuse' ~ Altaic ūRu-* 'to flow'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences are involved here. Proto-Nostratic initial */g-/ is not lost in Dravidian and Altaic.
2. The underlying root in the Semitic material cited by Illič-Svityč is *gVr-. The forms *g(w)r- ~ *g/y/r- are derivatives. On the origin of the */w/ ~ */y/ root extensions, cf. Militarëv 2005. Militarëv refers to them as “triconsonantizers”. He notes (2005:83):

Though a triconsonantal root may show certain meaning difference from its biconsonantal match, a triconsonantizer has no semantic value of its own and does not cause any regular meaning shift. Formerly, any consonant may be classified as a triconsonantizer in a broader sense, if it meets the above conditions. However, I prefer to classify as triconsonantizers in Semitic and, most probably, other Afrasian languages only the following consonants: w, y, ʔ (and, with hesitations, much less common t, ʕ, and h). All of them occur in the An-, In- and Auslaut position.

99. *gAMA ‘darkness, night’: Hamito-Semitic [*gm ‘dark’] ~ Kartvelian *yam-(e) ‘night’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1998:220) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian *yame- ‘last night’.
 2. The underlying meanings of the Semitic forms cited by Illič-Svityč is: ‘(vb.) to cover, to hide, to conceal; (adj.) hidden, concealed, dark; (n.) darkness, obscurity, etc.’ as in the following Arabic forms: gamuḍa, gamada ‘to be hidden, to be concealed, to hide; to close (eye); to be obscure, dark, abstruse, recondite, difficult to comprehend; to make obscure, abstruse, recondite, difficult to comprehend’, gāmiḍ ‘hidden, concealed; obscure, dark, ambiguous, abstruse, recondite, difficult to comprehend’, gamma ‘to cover, to veil, to conceal (something); to fill (someone) with sadness, pain, or grief; to pain, to grieve, distress’; gumma ‘grief, affliction, sorrow, distress, sadness, anxiety’; etc. Thus, the sense ‘(adj) dark; (n.) darkness’ is not the primary meaning but is derived from ‘to cover, to hide, to conceal’.
100. *hawa ‘to desire passionately’: Hamito-Semitic *hwj ‘to desire passionately’ ~ Indo-European *heŷ- ‘to desire passionately’ ~ Dravidian [*āv- ‘to desire passionately’]. Strong.

Comments:

1. In this entry, Illič-Svityč has correctly compared the initial laryngeal */h-/ (= */ǵa/ ~ */Ha/ ~ */ha/, etc.) in Proto-Indo-European with Proto-Semitic */h-/.
2. The Ancient Egyptian form cited by Illič-Svityč should be removed. The Cushitic material, on the other hand, belongs here.

Proto-Nostratic root haw-* (~ həw-*):
 (vb.) haw-* 'to long for, to desire';
 (n.) haw-a* 'desire'

101. haju* 'to live; life force': Hamito-Semitic hɔw* 'to live' ~ Indo-European heju-* 'life force' ~ (?) Altaic öjü-* 'alive, life'. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved here is /ǵ₂/* (= /H₂/* ~ /h₂/, etc.). It corresponds to Proto-Afrasian /ħ/ (IPA [ħ]).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1043—1044) reconstruct Proto-Altaic öje* 'life, age'.

Proto-Nostratic root hay-* (~ həy-*):
 (vb.) hay-* 'to live, to be alive';
 (n.) hay-a* 'life, age'

Extended form:

(vb.) hay-V-w-* 'to live, to be alive';
 (n.) hay-w-a* 'life, age'

102. (?) Ha* 'to become, to be': Dravidian ā-* 'to become, to be' ~ Altaic [ā-* 'to be']. Rejected.

Comment: Illič-Svityč was correct in putting a question mark before this entry. This is probably a chance resemblance.

103. Haja* 'to pursue, to chase': Indo-European [Hei-* 'to pursue, to cause evil'] ~ Uralic aja-* 'to chase, to pursue, to flee' ~ Altaic aja-* 'to hunt, to bag game'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:277—278) reconstruct Proto-Altaic āja* 'to go, to walk'.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:4—5) reconstructs Proto-Uralic aja-* 'to drive, to ride; to go, to travel; to chase away, to chase off, to drive away; to pursue' (semantics based upon Finnish). Aikio (2020:7—8) reconstructs Proto-Uralic aja-* 'to drive, to chase'. In spite of claims that this form may be borrowed from Proto-Indo-European H₂aĝ-* (= H₂ak-* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism), it is better to view this as a native Uralic word.

3. The Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved here is /ǵ₁/* (= /H₁/* ~ /h₁/*, etc.)

As an alternative to Illič-Svityč's proposal, Bomhard (no. 652) includes these forms in the following Proto-Nostratic etymology, reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, (?) Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic root ǵay-* (~ ǵəy-*):

(vb.) ǵay-* 'to go, to proceed';

(n.) ǵay-a* 'journey'

Note: The Indo-European evidence is ambiguous. It could also be derived from the following Proto-Nostratic forms, reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, (?) Indo-European, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan (cf. Bomhard, no. 673):

Proto-Nostratic root ǵiy-* (~ ǵey-*):

(vb.) ǵiy-* 'to come, to go';

(n.) ǵiy-a* 'approach, arrival; path, way'

104. HalA* 'forward edge': Uralic alA-, alka- 'beginning, forward edge' ~ Altaic āl-* 'front'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:284) reconstruct Proto-Altaic āla* 'front side'.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:6—7) reconstruct Proto-Finno-Ugrian alka-* '(front or back) end, beginning; to begin, to start'. A comparable Proto-Uralic entry is not listed in either Sammallahti 1988 or Aikio 2020.
3. Not in Bomhard (this book).

105. Hanga* 'to gape': Uralic aŋa/ōŋe 'mouth, opening; to open' ~ Dravidian aŋk(a)* 'gape' ~ Altaic aŋa* 'gape, opened'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Aikio (2020:20—22) reconstructs Proto-Uralic aŋa-* 'to open, to take off', (2020:22—23) aŋi/aŋa 'opening, mouth', (2020:23—24) aŋmV-* 'to yawn, to gape open', and (2020:24) aŋta-* 'to open, to take off'. See also Rédei 1986—1988:11 aŋa-* 'to open', 11—12 aŋe* 'opening'; Sammallahti 1988:542 Proto-Finno-Ugrian āŋi* 'mouth'.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:304) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic əŋa* ‘hole, crack, gape’.

Proto-Nostratic root haŋ-* (~ həŋ-*):

(vb.) haŋ-* ‘to split apart, to open (tr.); to gape, to open the mouth, to yawn’;

(n.) haŋ-a* ‘opening; yawn, gape, mouth; hole; crack, crevice’

106. Henka* ‘to burn’: Indo-European Heng-* ‘to burn’ (Hŋg-n-i-* ‘fire’, etc.) ~ Uralic eŋka-* ‘to burn’. Possible.

Comments:

1. De Vaan (2008:297) derives Latin ignis ‘fire’ from Proto-Indo-European h₁ngw-ni-* ‘(a) fire’, while Derksen (2015:478) derives Lithuanian ugnìs ‘fire’ from the same Proto-Indo-European form. Mayrhofer (1956—1980.I: 18), on the other hand, reconstructs Proto-Indo-European ŋg-ni-s* ‘fire’, with a plain velar instead of a labiovelar, thus supporting Illič-Svityč’s reconstruction. The initial laryngeal is uncertain here — De Vaan and Derksen opt for /h₁-/* (= /H₁-/* ~ /ǵ₁-/*).
 2. The Uralic forms are difficult to evaluate. Here, I am giving Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt, though, if this is a valid etymology, it should be revised as Henka* ‘to burn’, with medial ejective /-ḳ-/* (= /-kʰ-/) based upon the Proto-Indo-European form Hŋg-ni-s, which would be Hŋkʰ-ni-s* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism.
 3. Illič-Svityč also mentions possible Dravidian cognates at the end of the entry. These are best left out of consideration.
 4. The limited attestation indicates that this entry can only be reconstructed as Proto-Indo-Uralic rather than as Proto-Nostratic.
 5. Not in Bomhard (this book).
107. Herä* ‘to collapse’: Indo-European her-* ‘to collapse’ ~ Uralic erä-* ‘to collapse; part, portion’ ~ Dravidian ir(a)-/er- ‘to break apart’ ~ (?) Altaic [ärü-* ‘to disintegrate, to dissolve, to melt’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Indo-European material collected by Illič-Svityč is somewhat problematic. For example, De Vaan (2008:514) does not endorse any of the proposals concerning the etymology of Latin rārus ‘of loose structure, sparse, rare’, while Beekes (2010.1:456—457), in agreement with Illič-Svityč, derives Greek ἐρημος ‘lonely, uninhabited, deserted’ from Proto-Indo-European h₁r(e)h₁-* ‘loose, rare, separate’. In view of the most viable evidence from the Indo-European daughter languages, it seems preferable to assign a meaning of ‘to separate, to break apart’ (‘ломать’) to the Proto-Indo-European form rather than ‘to collapse, to fall down’ (‘разваливаться’).

2. From what has already been discussed in this review, in addition to what will follow below, it should be completely obvious that Illič-Svityč displays a rather superficial understanding of the Proto-Indo-European laryngeals. This is rather surprising given that most of the details concerning the Laryngeal Theory had already been worked out (by Kuryłowicz, Benveniste, Couvreur, and Sturtevant, to name the most important scholars) well before Illič-Svityč began his work on Nostratic.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:590) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ire* ‘to melt’ to account for the Turkic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. This is closer to Proto-Dravidian iṛ(a)-/eṛ- ‘to break apart’ (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:51, no. 520) in form, though the semantic differences are harder to reconcile.
4. The Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč also point to derivation from a Proto-Uralic form meaning ‘to separate, to break apart’ rather than ‘to collapse’ (cf. Finnish eri ‘separate, different; several, various, sundry’, erotan ‘to separate, to divide, to part, to sever, to disjoin’, ero ‘parting, separation; difference’, erä ‘part, portion, share’, etc.).
5. Not in Bomhard (this book). However, as an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 641) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic root ʔar-* (~ ʔər-*):

(vb.) ʔar-* ‘to cut (off, apart), to sever, to separate, to part asunder’;

(n.) ʔar-a* ‘half, side, part’; (adj.) ‘severed, separated, parted, disjoined’

108. Herä* ‘male’: Dravidian ēṛ-* ‘male’ ~ Altaic ērä* ‘male, man’. Possible.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:312) reconstruct Proto-Altaic āri* (~ ēra*) ‘man’.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ʔar-a* ‘male, man, husband’

109. H/i/mi* ‘to suck, to swallow’: Uralic ime-* ‘to suck’ ~ Altaic āmλ* ‘to suck, to swallow’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:505—506) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic emV* (~ ami*) ‘to suck’ > Proto-Mongolian em-kü-* ‘to swallow; to bite, to chew’, Proto-Turkic em-ig*, em-ček* ‘breast (fem.); to suck; nipple’.
2. Aikio reconstructs (2010:59—60) Proto-Uralic imi-* ‘to suck’ and (2010:60) (?) Proto-Uralic imćä* ‘breast’.
3. Dolgopolsky (2008:213—214, no. 134) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic ʕim[ê]* ‘to suck, to swallow’.

Proto-Nostratic root ʕim-* (~ ʕem-*):

(vb.) ʕim-* ‘to suck, to swallow’;

(n.) ʕim-a* ‘the act of sucking, swallowing; breast, nipple, teat’

110. (?) HENPΛ* ‘navel’: Kartvelian mp-e* ‘navel’ ~ Indo-European hēnbh-/hnebh- ‘navel’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Proto-Kartvelian /m̥/* does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /n/, and Proto-Kartvelian /p/ does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /bh/*.
 2. The Proto-Indo-European form may be a borrowing from Northwest Caucasian or vice versa — note the following:
 - A. Proto-Indo-European (neb^h-/)nob^h- ‘navel’: Sanskrit nābhi-ḥ ‘navel’; Old High German naba ‘nave, hub (of a wheel)’; Old Prussian nabis ‘navel’; etc.
 - B. Proto-Circassian nəba* ‘belly’: Bžedux nəba ‘belly’; Kabardian nəba ‘belly’. Note also: Temirgoy nəbəž’ə ‘navel’; Kabardian bənža ‘navel’; Abaza/Tapanta bənž’a ‘navel’; Ubykh nəbəž’ ‘navel’.
111. Hi* particle indicating past tense: Hamito-Semitic (H)j* particle indicating past tense ~ Kartvelian -e/-i suffix of aorist ~ Indo-European hē-* particle indicating past tense (augment) ~ Uralic -i-* suffix of past tense ~ Dravidian -i-* suffix of past tense. Weak.

Comment: Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 17, §17.4) proposes that a series of “formative vowels” are to be reconstructed for verbal stems in Proto-Nostratic and that they may have been aspect markers, as follows:

The formative vowels found in verbal stems may have been aspect markers, as Zaborski has tried to show for Omotic (cited in Bender 2000:217). Here, according to Zaborski, the patterning was as follows: a marks present (imperfective), i ~ e mark past (perfective), and u ~ o mark subordinate. Though originally supportive of Zaborski's views, Bender later became skeptical, pointing out that he finds the consonantal markers to be more significant. Indeed, for Omotic or even Afrasian, this is what we would expect. But Zaborski's views are not so easily dismissed. What he may have uncovered is a more archaic pattern, as Bender himself admits. In Finno-Ugrian, the ending -i-* shows up as a past tense marker (cf. Collinder 1960:305—307 and 1965:132—134; Décsy 1990:76). Likewise in Dravidian, where the suffix -i-* is one of several used to mark past tense (cf. Krishnamurti 2003:296—298). These may ultimately be derived from a perfective marker -i-*.

112. Hir'a* 'to drag, to pull': Dravidian īr-/iṛ-* 'to drag, to pull' ~ Altaic ir'a-* 'to drag, to pull'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:592—593) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ír'u* (= ír'yu*) 'trace, furrow'. They also note that Tsintsius (1975—1977.I: 323—324: ИП- II волочить) lists Proto-Tungus ir-* 'to draw, to drag, to haul, to pull, to tow, etc.' (< 'to leave a trace').
2. Burrow—Emeneau (1984:49, no. 504) show both initial short and long vowels in the Dravidian forms they cite: Tamil iru (-pp-, -tt-) 'to draw, to pull, to drag along the ground, to attract (as a magnet), to wheedle, to draw out, to stretch out, to draw into (as a whirlpool), to engulf, to absorb; to have convulsions'; Malayalam iruka 'to draw, to take off clothes'; Kannada ir, īr, ere 'to pull, to drag, to attract, to take away by force'; Konḍa iris- (-t-) 'to pull, to drag'; etc.
3. Though not in Bomhard, both the sound correspondences and semantics proposed by Illič-Svityč are solid.

113. HoḶi* 'point, spike': Indo-European Heḱ-* 'point, spike' ~ Altaic oki* 'arrow, extremity'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1046) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ōk'a* (= ōk'h'a*) 'sharp point, notch'.
2. Beekes (2010.I:47, I:50—51, I:52) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European h₂eḱ-* and (2020.II:1066) h₂ok-ri-, while Mallory—Adams (1997:509) reconstruct Proto-Indo-European h₂eḱ- 'sharp, pointed'. And so on, and so forth. Altogether, the consensus appears to be that the initial laryngeal in Proto-Indo-European was /ǵ₂-/* (= /H₂-/, /h₂-/).
3. This is another case where the forms cited from the daughter languages provide absolutely no evidence whatsoever for reconstructing an ejective at the Proto-Nostratic level. Consequently, though the etymology itself is acceptable, the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction proposed by Illič-Svityč, with a medial ejective */-Ḳ-/, is baseless.

Bomhard (no. 738) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) hok^h-a* ‘sharp point’.

114. Homsa* ‘meat’: Indo-European *(H)mēms- ‘meat’ ~ Uralic omśa* ‘meat’ ~ (?) Dravidian ūñc-* ‘meat’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. There is no evidence for an initial laryngeal in the Proto-Indo-European form (cf. Gamkrelidze—Ivanov 1995.1:604; Watkins 1985:41; Mallory—Adams 1997:374—375; etc.).
2. The Dravidian form does not belong here.

115. (?) HonČa* ‘end, edge’: Uralic ońća* ‘end, forward edge, front’ ~ Altaic [ūč(a)* ‘tip, point’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Illič-Svityč was right in putting a question mark before this entry. While the semantics are acceptable, the sound correspondences are flawed.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1482) reconstruct Proto-Altaic účʕi* (= úč^hi*) ‘end, edge’.

116. Horä* ‘to rise’: Indo-European H^uer-* ‘to raise, to rise, to move’ ~ (?) Dravidian ēṛ-* ‘to rise’ ~ Altaic or/a-/örä-* ‘to rise, to enter’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian form should be removed.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1065) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ōri* (= ōr^yi*) ‘to rise up’, with */-ř-/ (= */-r^y-/) instead of */-r-/.
3. There is no basis for reconstructing an initial labialized laryngeal */H^u-/ in Proto-Indo-European.

Bomhard (no. 677) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Indo-European, Yukaghir, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root ɔr^y-*:

(vb.) ɔr^y-* ‘to rise (up)’;

(n.) ɔr^y-a* ‘rising movement or motion’

Extended form:

(vb.) ʔorʷ-V-g-* ‘to climb on, to mount, to copulate (with)’;

(n.) ʔorʷ-g-a* ‘mounting, copulation’

117. (?) Hosa* ‘poplar’: Indo-European H^ues-* ‘poplar’ ~ Uralic oška* ‘poplar’. Possible.

Comments:

1. There is no basis for reconstructing an initial labialized laryngeal */H^u-/ in Proto-Indo-European. As shown by the Hittite cognate, the laryngeal involved was */ǵ₂-/ (= */H₂-/, */h₂-/): Hittite ḫaššik(ka)- ‘a tree and its fruit’ (?). Related forms include: Greek ὀξύη (< *ὀσκ[ε]σ- ?) ‘a kind of beech-tree’; Armenian hacĭ ‘ash-tree’; Albanian ah (< oskā*) ‘beech-tree’, ashe ‘holly’; Latin ornus (< os-en-os*) ‘mountain-ash’; Old Irish (h)uinn-ius ‘ash-tree’; Old Icelandic askr ‘ash-tree’; Swedish ask ‘ash-tree’; Old English æsc ‘ash-tree’; North Frisian esk ‘ash-tree’; Dutch esch ‘ash-tree’; Old High German ask ‘ash-tree’ (New High German Esche); Old Prussian woasis ‘ash-tree’; Lithuanian úosis (< ōs-*) ‘ash-tree’; Russian jásen’ [ясе́нь] ‘ash-tree’.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:812) derives the Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč from Proto-Uralic wakšt̚re* (wokšt̚re*). On the other hand, the Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč may be loans from Indo-European (cf. Collinder 1955:138—139 and 1977:149; Joki 1973:333).

Proto-Nostratic root ḥasʷ-* (~ ḥəsʷ-*) (used as the base to designate various tree names):

(n.) ḥasʷ-a* ‘a tree and its fruit’

118. HuKa* ‘eye; to see’: Indo-European H^uek^u-* ‘eye; to see’ ~ Altaic uka-* ‘to notice, to understand’. Strong.

Comments:

1. There is no basis for reconstructing an initial labialized laryngeal */H^u-/ in Proto-Indo-European. According to Beekes (2010.II:1118), the laryngeal was */ǵ₃-/ (= */H₃-/, /h₃-/), without labialization. He reconstructs Proto-Indo-European h₃ek^w- ‘to see’.
2. The Latin form cited by Illič-Svityč (okulus) is a typographical error — it should be oculus ‘eye’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1490—1491) reconstruct Proto-Altaic uk^ʷu* (= uk^hu*) ‘to understand, to look into’.

4. This is another case where the forms cited from the daughter languages provide absolutely no evidence whatsoever for reconstructing an ejective at the Proto-Nostratic level. Consequently, though the etymology itself is acceptable, the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction proposed by Illič-Svityč, with a medial ejective */-Ḳ-/ , is baseless.
5. Not in Bomhard (this book).

119. Huwa* ‘flow of water’: Uralic uwa* ‘current, flow’ ~ Altaic ū(a)* ‘water, wave’. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1285—1286) derive the Mongolian forms cited by Illič-Svityč from Proto-Altaic sju*ba (~ -u) ‘water’. They explain the Mongolian forms as having originated through dissimilation: u-su-* < su-su-* (< sub-su-*).

120. (?) Hüt* ‘rest period’: Uralic üt*/jüt* ‘evening, night’ ~ Altaic üdä* ‘rest time (day or night)’. Rejected.

Comment: According to Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1042), the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč go back to Proto-Altaic odi* (~ -e) ‘day, time’, which clearly cannot be related to the Uralic forms he cites.

121. ʔa* demonstrative pronoun indicating distant object, ‘that’: Hamito-Semitic ʔ/a* demonstrative pronoun ~ Kartvelian *(h)a demonstrative pronoun indicating nearby object ~ Indo-European he-n-* demonstrative particle ~ Uralic a-/o- demonstrative pronoun indicating distant object ~ Dravidian ā* demonstrative pronoun indicating distant object ~ (?) Altaic [a-/o- ‘that’]. Strong.

Comments:

1. Proto-Nostratic ʔ*/ does not become */h/ in either Proto-Indo-European or Proto-Kartvelian.
2. The Indo-European material cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. Instead, the following material from Indo-European should be included (cf. Bomhard, no. 614):

Proto-Indo-European demonstrative stem ʔe-/ʔo-, ʔey-/*ʔoy-/ʔi- (< ʔe-/ʔo-+y/i-): Sanskrit ayám ‘this’ (gen. sg. m./n. a-syá, á-sya; f. a-syáh, idám ‘this’, (f.) iyám ‘she, this’, á-taḥ ‘from this, hence’ (< e-to-s*), (n.) e-tát ‘this, this here’, ihá ‘here’ (Pāṇi idha ‘here, in this place, in this connection, now’), e-śá (f. e-ṣā) ‘this’; Old Persian a- ‘this’, aita- ‘this’, ima- ‘this’, iyam ‘this’, idā ‘here’; Avestan a- ‘this’, aētaṭ ‘this’, ima- ‘this’, ida ‘here’; Hittite enclitic demonstrative particle (nom. sg.) -aš, (acc. sg.) -an, (n. sg.) -at ‘he, she, it’; (dat. sg.) e-di, i-di, e-da-ni ‘to or for him, her, it'; Latin is, ea, id 'he, she, it; this or that person or thing'; Oscan eiso- 'this'; Umbrian (dat. sg.) esmei 'to this, to it'; Old Irish é 'he, they', ed 'it'; Gothic anaphoric pronoun is 'he', ita 'it'; Old Icelandic relative particle es (later er) 'who, which, what'; Old Saxon et, it 'it'; Old High German er, ir 'he', ez, iz 'it' (New High German er 'he', es 'it'); Lithuanian jis (< is*) 'he'.

Proto-Nostratic demonstrative stems (originally deictic particles):

Proximate:	*ʔi- (~ *ʔe-) 'this';
Intermediate:	*ʔu- (~ *ʔo-) 'that';
Distant:	*ʔa- (~ *ʔə-) 'that yonder, that over there'

Note: These stems regularly combined with other deictic particles: ʔa/i/u+na-, ʔa/i/u+ša-, ʔa/i/u+ma-, ʔa/i/u+tḥa-, ʔa/i/u+kʰa-, ʔa/i/u+ya-, etc.

122. ʔa* formant of verbal constructions ~ Hamito-Semitic ʔ-/-ʔ formant of deverbative nouns ~ Kartvelian (h)a-/-a formant of deverbative nouns ~ Indo-European -o-* suffix of deverbative nouns ~ Dravidian -a suffix of participles and deverbative nouns. Weak.

Comments:

1. I have rated this entry as "weak" because it appears that Illič-Svityč has confused different grammatical markers here, some of which can be compared, some not, and because Illič-Svityč failed to grasp the correct morphological function of this formant. Thus, this entry cannot stand as written.
2. The Afrasian material should be completely removed, as should the Proto-Kartvelian prefixed (h)a-/*.
3. Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 17, §17.5) has proposed that a series of terminal vowels are to be reconstructed for Proto-Nostratic and that these terminal vowels are morphologically significant:

During the earliest period of Proto-Nostratic, roots could only have the forms: (a) CV-* and (b) CVC-*. Type (a) was restricted to pronominal stems and indeclinables, while type (b) characterized nominal and verbal stems. A single derivational suffix could be placed after root type (b): CVC+C* (derivational suffix [DS]). Grammatical relationships were indicated by placing particles either after the undifferentiated stem or after the stem plus a derivational suffix: (a) CVC + CV* (particle [P]) or (b) CVC+C* (derivational suffix [DS]) + CV

(particle [P]). In nominal stems, a morphologically significant terminal vowel (TV) had to be added directly after the root, while in verbal stems, a formative vowel (FV) had to be added between the root and any following element, be it derivational suffix or particle; thus, we get the following patterns:

- (a) (noun stem) $*CVC(+C_{DS})+V_{TV}$ (plus particle): $*CVC(+C_{DS})+V_{TV} + CV_P$
 (b) (verb stem) $*CVC+V_{FV}(+C_{DS})$ (plus particle): $*CVC+V_{FV}(+C_{DS}) + CV_P$

The derivational suffixes were derivational rather than grammatical in that they either changed the grammatical category of a word or affected its meaning rather than its relation to other words in a sentence.

These terminal vowels may be roughly comparable to the suffixed grammatical formants that Illič-Svityč envisioned, though with different functions. Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 17, §17.5) assumes the following patterning existed in early Proto-Nostratic for the terminal vowels in noun stems:

1. -u* was used to mark the subject (the agent) in active constructions — these subjects “perform, effect, instigate, and control events” (Mithun 1991:538);
2. -i* indicated possession;
3. -a* was used to mark:
 - (a) The direct object (the patient) of transitive verbs;
 - (b) The subject (“non-agent subject” [= the patient]) in stative constructions — these subjects are “affected; things happen or have happened to them”, just like direct objects (Mithun 1991:538);
 - (c) The so-called “status indeterminatus”.

123. $\text{ʔ}al'a$ ‘food’: Hamito-Semitic $\text{ʔ}l$ ‘fat, fatty food’ ~ Indo-European $*hel-$ ‘feed, breed’ ~ Dravidian $*al(a)$ ‘fat, strength’ ~ Altaic $*al'(a)-$ ‘food’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Here again, Proto-Nostratic $\text{ʔ}/$ does not become $\text{h}/$ in Proto-Indo-European.
2. The material cited by Illič-Svityč does not form a coherent etymology.
3. A totally different Proto-Indo-European stem should be included: Proto-Indo-European $\text{ǵ}₂el-$ [$\text{ǵ}₂al-$] ‘to grow, to be strong’ ($*\text{ǵ}₂/ = \text{H}_2/$, $\text{h}_2/$) (cf. Walde 1927—1932.I:86—87; Pokorny 1959:26—27; Rix 2001:262; Mallory—Adams 1997:258; etc.).
4. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč should be removed and replaced by the following (cf. Bomhard, no. 711):

Proto-Afrasian $\text{ħ}al-$ ‘to grow, to be strong’: Proto-Semitic $\text{ħ}al-am-$ ‘to grow, to be strong’ > Arabic ħalama ‘to attain puberty’; Hebrew ħālam ‘to be healthy, strong'; Syriac ḥalīm 'healthy, firm'. Proto-Semitic ḥal-ak'* 'to grow (up)' > Geez / Ethiopic ḥalkā 'to grow, to grow up, to increase'.

Proto-Nostratic root ḥalʷ-* (~ ḥəʷ-*):

(vb.) ḥalʷ-* 'to grow, to be strong';

(n.) ḥalʷ-a* 'health, strength, power'; (adj.) 'healthy, strong, powerful; grown, great, large'

124. ʔamu* 'morning, daylight': (?) Hamito-Semitic ʔmr* 'daylight; to see' ~ Indo-European hēm-* 'day' ~ Uralic amA-/oma- (< amo-*) 'morning'. Rejected.

Comment: Here again, Proto-Nostratic /ʔ/* does not become /h/* in Proto-Indo-European.

125. (Descriptive) ʔanqA* 'to breathe': Hamito-Semitic [ʔnh* 'to sigh'] ~ Indo-European henH-* 'to breathe'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Here again, Proto-Nostratic /ʔ/* does not become /h/* in Proto-Indo-European.
2. Though the Semitic evidence cited by Illič-Svityč must be removed, the Egyptian/Coptic forms are correct. Even between Semitic and Egyptian/Coptic, Illič-Svityč has proposed faulty sound correspondences: Semitic /ʔ/* does not correspond to Egyptian /ʕ/ (= ʕ) — the usual correspondence is to Egyptian /β/ (= 𐤁) ~ /ʕ/ (= 𐤁).

Proto-Nostratic root ʕan-* (~ ʕən-*):

(vb.) ʕan-* 'to breathe, to respire, to live';

(n.) ʕan-a* 'life, breath'

126. ʔarba* 'to practice witchcraft': Hamito-Semitic [ʔrb* 'to be clever, prudent'] ~ Uralic arpa-* 'to practice witchcraft; magical equipment of sorcerer' ~ Altaic [arba-* 'to practice witchcraft']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. For Afrasian, Illič-Svityč only cites material from Semitic, and, even there, the meanings assigned to the forms cited are not even close to the meanings of the forms cited from Uralic and Altaic: Arabic ʿariba ‘to be skillful, to be proficient’, ʿirba ‘skill, resourcefulness, cleverness, smartness’. The underlying root here is rVb-*: cf. the related Arabic rabba (with reduplicated /b/) ‘to be master, to be lord, to have possession (of); to control, to have command or authority (over)’. For comparison with the Hebrew ʿāraḅ (with /ʔ-/ first radical = “triconsonantizer” [cf. Militarev 2005]) ‘to lie in ambush, to lie in wait for’ cited by Illič-Svityč, cf. Arabic raḅaša (with /-ṣ-/ third radical) ‘to wait for, to look, to watch, to be on the lookout (for); to lurk, to lie in wait, to waylay, to ambush; etc.’; Ṭamūdīc wrb (with /w-/ first radical = “triconsonantizer” [cf. Militarev 2005]) ‘to lie in ambush’. And so on, and so forth. Thus, the Semitic material should be removed.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:313—314) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ār-* ‘witchcraft, craft’. Illič-Svityč only cites Turkic forms (he reconstructs Proto-Turkic arba-* ‘to cast spells’), while Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak base their etymology on forms from Tungusic and Mongolian as well as Turkic. They also note that Middle Mongolian arba- ‘to cast spells’ is a loan from Turkic.
 3. Rédei (1986—1988) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian arpa* ‘to practice magic, soothsaying, fortune-telling; sorcerer, magician, soothsayer, fortune-teller’. The Uralic material cited by Illič-Svityč may be borrowed from Turkic.
127. ʔaSa* ‘fire’: Hamito-Semitic ʔš* ‘fire’ ~ Indo-European hes-* ‘hearth; dry’ ~ Altaic [aSa-*] ‘ignite’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. A better comparison would be with Arabic (reduplicated) haṣḥasa ‘to place meat on the coals’. Note: Orël—Stolbova (1995: 275, no. 1244) reconstruct Proto-Afro-asiatic has-* ‘to roast’.
2. Here again, Proto-Nostratic ʔ/* does not become h/* in Proto-Indo-European.
3. Hittite (acc. sg.) ḫa-aš-ša-an ‘hearth’, (nom sg.) ḫa-a-aš ‘ashes (in pl.); soda ash, potash, soap’ show that the Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved here is ʔ₂/* (= H₂/, h₂/). This means that, if the Proto-Indo-European form is to be included here, as it must be, then Illič-Svityč’s reconstruction of an initial ʔ-/* in the Proto-Nostratic form is mistaken.
4. Rédei (1986—1988:27) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian äs₃-* ‘to heat up; to be hot, warm’.

5. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:316—317) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic ase-* (~ p^h*) ‘to catch fire; hot’.

Proto-Nostratic root has-* (~ hās-*):
 (vb.) has-* ‘to burn, to be hot’;
 (n.) has-a* ‘cinder, ember, ashes; heat’

128. āla* particle of categorical negation: Hamito-Semitic ʔl/lʔ* prohibitive and negative particle ~ (?) Kartvelian [ar(a)* particle of categorical negation] ~ Uralic āla*/ela* 2nd person singular imperative of negative verb ~ Dravidian al(a)- negative verb ~ (?) Altaic [ülä- negative verb]. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Kartvelian material does not belong here.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1493) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic ule* (~ -i) negative particle.
3. Only found in Hittite in Indo-European: Hittite li-e element used with the present indicative to express a negative command. The Hittite form is isolated within Indo-European. Many scholars take it to be from Proto-Indo-European ne*, but this is disputed by Kloekhorst (2008:523).

Proto-Nostratic root ʔal-* (~ ʔəl-) (perhaps also ʔel-, ʔul-*):
 (vb.) ʔal-* ‘to be not so-and-so or such-and-such’;
 (n.) ʔal-a* ‘nothing’

Originally a negative verb stem meaning ‘to be not so-and-so or such-and-such’ — later used in some branches as a negative particle.

129. ʔe* negative particle: Hamito-Semitic ʔj* negative and prohibitive particle ~ Uralic e-* negative verb (indicative stem) ~ Dravidian -a-/-e- infix of negative form of verb ~ Altaic e-* negative verb. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Afrasian form should be removed.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:488) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic e* ‘not’.

Bomhard (no. 656) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Etruscan:

Proto-Nostratic negative particle ʔe* 'no, not'.

130. ʔejʌ* 'to arrive, to come': Hamito-Semitic ʔj* 'to arrive, to come' ~ Indo-European h₁ei-* 'to go' ~ Dravidian ej-* 'to arrive, to approach' ~ Altaic ṭ-* 'to arrive, to enter'. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved here is /ǵ₁/* (= /H₁/, /h₁/).
2. The Proto-Altaic form should be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root ʔiy-* (~ ʔey-*):

(vb.) ʔiy-* 'to come, to go';

(n.) ʔiy-a* 'approach, arrival; path, way'

Note also (Bomhard, no. 652):

(vb.) ʔay-* 'to go, to proceed';

(n.) ʔay-a* 'journey'

131. ʔelʌ* 'to live': Hamito-Semitic ʔ(j)l* 'to be, to exist; settlement' ~ Uralic elä-* 'to live' ~ Dravidian il/(?)* el-* 'dwelling, abode' ~ Altaic ēl* 'settlement, peaceful life'. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Altaic material should be removed. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:501) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ēlV* 'peace'.
2. Aikio (2020:43—44) reconstructs Proto-Uralic elkio* 'to live / to go, to visit'

Proto-Nostratic root ʔil-* (~ ʔel-*):

(vb.) ʔil-* 'to live, to be alive; to be, to exist';

(n.) ʔil-a* 'dwelling, habitation, house'; (adj.) 'living, alive, existing'

132. * $\mathcal{P}esA$ ‘to settle a place, to be at a place’: Hamito-Semitic * $\mathcal{P}j\check{s}/*\mathcal{P}j\check{l}$ ‘to arrive at a place, to be at a place, to be’ ~ Indo-European * $\check{h}es-$ ‘to be’, * $\check{h}\check{e}\check{s}-$ ‘to sit’ ~ Uralic * $e\check{s}A$ ‘to settle a place; place, site’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč should be removed. Too many ad hoc explanations are required to try and make it fit in.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:18—19) reconstructs Proto-Uralic * $a\check{s}e$ ‘to put, to place, to set’, while Aikio (2010:48—49) reconstructs Proto-Uralic * $e\check{c}i$ ‘to set’, * $e\check{c}i-w-$ ‘camp’. See also Collinder 1944:26; Joki 1973:252—253. I prefer the traditional reconstruction (Rédei, Collinder, Joki; etc.).
3. The Proto-Indo-European form * $\mathcal{P}ies-$ ‘to be’ probably does not belong here, while * $\mathcal{P}i\check{e}s-$ ‘to put, to place, to set; to sit, to be seated’ does. It is universally agreed that the Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved is */ $\mathcal{P}i/$ (= */ $H_1/$, */ $h_1/$). The semantic range assigned to the Proto-Indo-European form here is reflected in Hittite (3rd sg. pres.) $e-e\check{s}-zi$, $a-a\check{s}-zi$ ‘to set, to sit, to beset, to do’. In the other Indo-European daughter languages, it has been specialized in the meaning ‘to sit, to be seated’: Greek $\eta\sigma\tau\alpha\iota$ ‘to sit, to be seated’; Sanskrit $\check{a}ste$ ‘to sit, to sit down’; Avestan $\check{a}ste$ ‘to sit’.

Proto-Nostratic root * $\mathcal{P}as^y-$ (~ * $\mathcal{P}\partial s^y-$):

(vb.) * $\mathcal{P}as^y-$ ‘to put, to place, to set; to sit, to be seated’;

(n.) * $\mathcal{P}as^-a$ ‘place, seat’; (adj.) ‘put, placed, set, established’

133. * $\mathcal{P}EmA$ ‘to seize, to take’: Hamito-Semitic * $\mathcal{P}m-$ ‘to seize, to take’ ~ Indo-European * $\check{h}em-$ ‘to take’. Strong.

Comment: The Proto-Indo-European laryngeal involved is */ $\mathcal{P}i/$ (= */ $H_1/$, */ $h_1/$). This laryngeal is commonly interpreted as a glottal stop */ $\mathcal{P}/$ (cf. Bomhard, Chapter 4, §4.1). Thus, the Proto-Indo-European form is better reconstructed as * $\mathcal{P}em-/*\mathcal{P}\eta-$ ‘to take, to obtain’. This is supported by the following evidence from the Indo-European daughter languages (with references):

Proto-Indo-European * $\mathcal{P}em-/*\mathcal{P}\eta-$ ‘to take, to obtain’: Latin $em\bar{o}$ ‘to purchase, to buy’; Umbrian (past. ptc.) $emps$ ‘taken’; Old Irish $-em-$ in $ar-f\acute{o}-em-at$ ‘they take’; Lithuanian $im\grave{u}$, $i\check{m}ti$ ‘to take, to accept, to receive, to get’; Old Church Slavic $im\grave{o}$, $j\acute{e}ti$ ‘to take’. Pokorny 1959:310—311 * $em-$, * e_m- ‘to take’; Walde 1927—1932.I:124—125 * $em-$; Rix 1998a:209—210 * h_1em- ‘to take’; Mann 1984—1987:240 * $em\bar{o}$ (* $i\check{m}\bar{o}$, * $\eta\bar{o}$) ‘to take, to get’; Watkins 1985:17 * $em-$ and 2000:23 * $em-$ ‘to take, to distribute’; Mallory—Adams 1997:564 * h_1em- ‘to take, to distribute’; Gamkrelidze—Ivanov 1984.II:754 * $em-$ and 1995.I:187,

I:194, I:657 *em- 'to take, to have'; De Vaan 2008:188—189; Walde—Hofmann 1965—1972.I:400—402 *em- 'to take'; Ernout—Meillet 1979:195—196; Derksen 2008:158 *h₁m- and 2015:200—201 *h₁m-; Smoczyński 2007.1:220—221 *h₁em-/*h₁m-; Fraenkel 1962—1965.I:184—185.

Proto-Nostratic root *ʔam- (~ *ʔam-):

(vb.) *ʔam- 'to seize, to grasp, to take, to touch, to hold (closely or tightly)';
 (n.) *ʔam-a 'grasp, hold, hand(ful)'; (adj.) 'seized, grasped, touched, held, obtained'

134. *ʔi/(?) *ʔe demonstrative pronoun (indicating nearby object: 'this'): Hamito-Semitic *j demonstrative pronoun, verbal indicator of 3rd singular masculine subject ~ Kartvelian *(h)i- demonstrative pronoun indicating distant object, *(h)e demonstrative pronoun ~ Indo-European *hei-/*he- demonstrative pronoun, 3rd person pronoun ~ Uralic *i-/*e- demonstrative pronoun indicating nearby object ~ Dravidian *i/*e demonstrative pronoun indicating nearby object ~ Altaic *i demonstrative pronoun, indicator of 3rd singular subject; *e demonstrative pronoun indicating nearby object. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Afrasian form reconstructed by Illič-Svityč is incorrect. Based upon data from Cushitic (Southern Cushitic, Beja / Beɣawye, and Agaw), the following demonstrative stems should be reconstructed for Proto-Afrasian: (A) proximate *ʔi- 'this'; (B) intermediate *ʔu- 'that'; (C) distant *ʔa- 'that yonder, that over there'. These could also be used as suffixes as in Southern Cushitic: (A) *-i nearness marker, (B) *-a farness marker, (C) *-o marker of reference (indefinite distance).
2. The reconstructions for the individual branches need to be updated.
3. The Proto-Nostratic pattern of *ʔa- (distant) ~ *ʔi- (proximate) was changed to *a- (proximate) ~ *i- (distant) in Kartvelian.

Proto-Nostratic demonstrative stems (originally deictic particles):

Proximate:	*ʔi- (~ *ʔe-) 'this';
Intermediate:	*ʔu- (~ *ʔo-) 'that';
Distant:	*ʔa- (~ *ʔə-) 'that yonder, that over there'

Note: These stems regularly combined with other deictic particles: *ʔa/i/u+na-, *ʔa/i/u+ša-, *ʔa/i/u+ma-, *ʔa/i/u+tʰa-, *ʔa/i/u+kʰa-, *ʔa/i/u+ya-, etc.

135. *ʔili ‘deer’: Hamito-Semitic [*ʔil ‘deer’] ~ Indo-European *h₂el-n- ‘deer’ ~ Dravidian *il- ‘deer’ ~ Altaic *ili ‘deer, wild goat’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian material does not belong here.
2. Illič-Svityč based his Proto-Altaic reconstruction primarily on the Mongolian forms he cites: cf. Written Mongolian ili, eli ‘a young deer, fawn’. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:501) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *ɛlV(-kʰV) (= *ɛlV (-kʰV)) ‘deer’.

Bomhard (no. 614) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, Yukaghir, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) *ʔil-a (~ *ʔel-a) ‘deer’

136. *ʔitā ‘to eat’ ~ Hamito-Semitic *t(j)ʔ/*ʔjt ‘to eat’ ~ Indo-European *h₂ed- ‘to eat’ ~ Altaic [*ida- ‘to eat’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč must be removed. It should be replaced by the following, with medial ejective */tʰ/:

Proto-Afrasian *ʔitʰ-, *ʔetʰ- ‘to eat, to bite into’: Proto-Semitic *ʔatʰ-am- ‘to bite into’ > Arabic ʔaṭama ‘to bite into’; Ugaritic ūṭm ‘bite, mouthful, morsel’. (?) Ancient Egyptian idbw ‘of the mouth’ (medical term). Berber: Tawlemmet əttəd ‘to suck’, sudəd ‘to suckle, to nurse, to breast-feed’; Nefusa tadḍa ‘leech’; Mزاب əttəd ‘to suck’, ssəttəd ‘to suckle, to nurse, to breast-feed’; Wargla əttəd ‘to suck’; Tamazight əttəd ‘to suck’, ssuttəd ‘to suckle, to nurse, to breast-feed’, tiḍitt ‘leech’; Tashelhiyt / Shilha əttəd ‘to suck’; Riff əttəd ‘to suck’, uḍud ‘nursing, breast-feeding’; Kabyle əttəd ‘to suck’, tuttḍa ‘sucking’; Chaouia əttəd ‘to suck, to be sucked’, timsuddəṭ ‘wet-nurse’; Zenaga dud ‘to suck’, suddud ‘to suckle, to nurse, to breast-feed’, əḍəd ‘to bite’. (?) Chadic: Fyer et- ‘to eat’; Tangale edi- ‘to eat’. (?) East Cushitic: Burji it- ‘to eat’; Gedeo / Darasa it- ‘to eat’; Hadiyya it- ‘to eat’; Kambata it- ‘to eat’; Sidamo it- ‘to eat’; Galla / Oromo it-o ‘food’.

2. According to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism, the Proto-Indo-European form is to be reinterpreted as *ʔetʰ- ‘to eat’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:594) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *ite (~ *eti) ‘to eat’. Proto-Altaic unaspirated */-t-/ is from Proto-Nostratic */-tʰ-/.

Proto-Nostratic root ʔit'-* (~ ʔet'-*):

(vb.) ʔit'-* 'to chew, to bite, to eat, to consume';

(n.) ʔit'-a* 'the act of eating; that which is eaten: food, nourishment'

137. ʕal'a* 'to cross (a mountain)': Hamito-Semitic ʕl-* 'to cross a mountain, to climb up; summit' ~ (?) Indo-European hel-* 'on the other side' ~ Altaic āl'a* 'to cross a mountain'. Weak.

Comments:

1. The Indo-European material must be removed. This is another case where Illič-Svityč's rudimentary understanding of the Proto-Indo-European laryngeals has led him to propose a false cognate. The semantics are also not a good match.
2. Bomhard (no. 747) reconstructs Proto-Afrasian ʕal-* '(vb.) to be high, exalted; to rise high; to ascend; (particle) on, upon, on top of, over, above, beyond'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:292) reconstruct Proto-Altaic āla* 'to cross (a mountain)'. They base their reconstruction of a Proto-Altaic medial palatalized /-l̥-/* on the Turkic forms they cite. They also note: "TM [Tungus-Manchu] cannot be explained as borrowed < Mong[olian]."
4. Dolgopolsky (2008:205—207, no. 126) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic ʕAlV* (= ʕalE* or ʕālī*) 'height, top; to climb, to go up', with medial unpalatalized /-l-/. Bomhard agrees and does not reconstruct a Proto-Nostratic medial palatalized /-ly-/ here.
5. Medial palatalized /-ly-/* is absent from Uralic (cf. Rédei 1986—1988:24 Proto-Uralic äl̥z-* 'to lift, to raise'; Collinder 1977:27; Décsy 1990:98 Proto-Uralic äl̥ä-* 'to lift, to carry'; Janhunen 1977:26 il̥ä-, with different initial vowel but also without medial palatalized /-ly-/).

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's etymology, Bomhard (no. 747) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root ʕal-* (~ ʕəl-*):

(vb.) ʕal-* 'to be high, tall, elevated, exalted; to rise high; to ascend';

(n.) ʕal-a* 'highest point: peak, summit, mountain';

(particle) ʕal-* 'on, upon, on top of, over, above, beyond'

138. (Descriptive) ʕ/e/bU* 'breast': Hamito-Semitic ʕb(w)* 'breast, bosom' ~ Kartvelian ub-e* 'bosom, breasts' ~ Altaic [e/bü* 'breast, bosom']. Possible.

Comment: The Altaic material does not match phonetically, though the semantics are sound. Consequently, it should be removed. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003: 513) reconstruct Proto-Altaic épʰá* (= épʰá*) ‘breast, rib’, which is an even poorer fit here than Illič-Svityč’s reconstruction.

Bomhard (no. 764) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian and Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ʕub-a* ‘bosom, breast’

139. ʕEKu* ‘water’: Hamito-Semitic ʕq(w)* ~ Indo-European h^hek^u-* ‘water’. Rejected.

Comment: This is an impossible comparison. The initial laryngeals do not match, and Proto-Afrasian ejective /-k’-/* (Illič-Svityč writes /-q’-/) does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /-k^u-/.

140. (?) ʕALA* ‘to burn (sacrificial offerings)’ ~ Hamito-Semitic ʕl* ‘to burn offerings; flame’ ~ Indo-European Hel-* ‘to burn offerings, to blaze’. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root ʕal-* (~ ʕəl-*):

(vb.) ʕal-* ‘to make a fire, to light a fire, to ignite, to kindle, to burn’;

(n.) ʕal-a* ‘fire, torch’

141. ʕAǰA* ‘branch’: Hamito-Semitic ʕǰ* ‘tree, branch’ ~ Indo-European H/o/sd-o-* ‘branch’. Rejected.

Comment: This is also an impossible comparison. The putative cognates do not match phonetically, though the semantics are similar. The initial laryngeal in Proto-Indo-European has to be /ǰ₂-/* (= /H₂-/, /h₂-/) based upon the Hittite evidence: (nom.-acc. sg.) ḫa-aš-du-e-er ‘twig(s), brushwood’. This is traditionally compared with Greek ὄζος ‘twig, branch’; Arm. ost ‘twig, branch’; Goth. asts ‘branch’ (this comparison is cautiously rejected by Kloekhorst 2008:326—327, but his counter-proposal is not convincing).

142. ja* ‘which, who’ (interrogative and relative): Hamito-Semitic ja/ǰaj ‘which, who’ (interrogative-relative) ~ Kartvelian [ja* ‘who’] ~ Indo-European jo-* ‘which’ (relative) ~ Uralic jo-* ‘who, some kind of’ (relative and indefinite) ~ Dravidian jā-* ‘which, what’ (interrogative) ~ Altaic ja* ‘which’ (interrogative). Strong.

Comment: This is a particularly strong etymology, with reflexes in nearly every branch of Nostratic.

Proto-Nostratic interrogative-relative pronoun stem ʔay-, ʔya- '(relative) who, which, what; (interrogative) who?, which?, what?'

Note: According to Bomhard (no. 650), this is a derivative of the following interrogative verb stem (reconstructed based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European [Anatolian and Tocharian], and Altaic):

Proto-Nostratic root ʔay-* (~ ʔəy-*):
(vb.) ʔay-* 'to do what?, to act in what manner?'

143. jaHU* (or joHΛ*) 'bandage, girdle': Indo-European jeh^{us}-* 'belt, girdle' ~ Uralic jōγΛ* 'belt, tourniquet for bandaging' ~ Dravidian jā-* 'to tie up'. Strong.

Comment: Though this is a valid etymology, the phonology needs to be completely revised to bring it into alignment with current research.

Proto-Nostratic root yaʔ-* (~ yəʔ-*):
(vb.) yaʔ-* 'to tie, to bind, to gird';
(n.) yaʔ-a* 'binding, bond, bandage; belt, girdle'

144. (?) jamΛ* 'water': Hamito-Semitic jam* 'water, sea' ~ Uralic [j/a/mΛ-* 'sea'] ~ (?) Dravidian [amm-* 'water']. Possible.

Comment: The Dravidian evidence provisionally included by Illič-Svityč does not belong here and must be removed.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) yam-a* 'water, sea'

145. (?) jara* ‘to shine’: Dravidian ēr-/eri- ‘to shine, to blaze’ ~ Altaic jaru-* ‘to shine’. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1512—1513) reconstruct Proto-Altaic zēra* ‘light; moon, moon cycle (year)’ to account for the Altaic forms listed by Illič-Svityč. This is clearly a poor match with Dravidian.

146. jana* ‘to talk’ ~ Hamito-Semitic jn* ‘to talk’ ~ Dravidian jana-* ‘to talk’. Strong.

Comment: Illič-Svityč provided very sparse documentation for this etymology. However, Bomhard (no. 787) has greatly expanded the Afrasian documentation with examples from Berber and Highland East Cushitic.

Proto-Nostratic root yan-* (~ yən-*):
 (vb.) yan-* ‘to say, to speak’;
 (n.) yan-a* ‘saying, word, expression’

147. (?) jänTɬ* ‘to stretch, to extend, to pull’: Uralic jäntɬ-* ‘to pull tight’ (jäntɬ-š*, jäntɬ-ŋ* [etc.] ‘bowstring, tendon, sinew’) ~ Dravidian [ēnt-* ‘to extend hands, to seize with hands’]. Rejected.

Comment: The Dravidian documentation cited by Illič-Svityč is very sparse. He also hesitatingly mentions possible Altaic cognates, but these are not convincing. It is best to abandon this etymology.

148. jela* ‘light, bright’: Kartvelian el-* ‘to sparkle (of lightning)’ ~ Uralic jela* ‘light, bright, clear, day’ ~ Dravidian el(a)-* ‘light, bright, shining’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Uralic material should be removed. The Proto-Nostratic form reconstructed by Illič-Svityč should be modified accordingly.
2. Bomhard (no. 660) has proposed a slightly different Nostratic etymology, based upon evidence from Afrasian and Dravidian (see below). The Kartvelian material cited by Illič-Svityč should be added to Bomhard’s etymology (cf. Klimov 1964:78—79 el-* ‘сверкать (о молнии)’ and 1998:46—47 Proto-Kartvelian el-* ‘to sparkle [of lightning]’).

Proto-Nostratic root ʔel-*:

(vb.) ʔel-* ‘to shine, to radiate, to glitter, to glisten’;

(n.) ʔel-a* ‘luster, splendor, light

149. -jE* formant of optative: Indo-European -i-, -jeĥ- suffix of optative ~ Altaic -jE-* suffix of optative (volitive). Rejected.

Comment: The optative is commonly considered to be a later development in Proto-Indo-European (cf. Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 19, §19.16, with references) — it is missing in the Anatolian branch.

150. -ja* suffix of denominal and deverbative adjectives: Hamito-Semitic -ij* suffix of relative adjectives and participles ~ Indo-European -jo-/-ijo- suffix of denominal and deverbative adjectives ~ Uralic -j(ʌ)* adjective suffix, -ja/* -jä* suffix of agent nouns and participles ~ Dravidian -i* suffix of indeclinable participle ~ Altaic -i suffix of deverbative nouns and participles. Possible.

Comments:

1. Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.40) reconstructs a Proto-Nostratic derivational suffix -y-* and suggests that it “may have been used to form deverbative nouns — it may also have been added to nouns to form attributes”, similar to the functions assigned to this suffix in Afrasian by Ehret (1995:16).
 2. It appears that Illič-Svityč has confused several different suffixes here, and it is questionable whether this entry can stand as written. Nonetheless, I have given him the benefit of the doubt and rated this entry as “possible”.
151. -ja* diminutive-endearing suffix of nouns used in addressing: Hamito-Semitic -(a)j* suffix of endearing and diminutive nouns ~ Kartvelian -ia* diminutive-endearing suffix (chiefly in addressing) ~ Uralic -j* diminutive-endearing suffix (often in addressing) ~ Altaic -j* diminutive-endearing suffix (usually in addressing). Possible.

Comments:

1. Not in Bomhard (this book).
 2. Here again, I am giving Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt.
152. -j(ʌ)* affix of oblique form of plural nouns: Hamito-Semitic -aj* suffix of plural nouns (originally oblique form) ~ Indo-European -i* formant of plural (originally with the stem of demonstrative pronoun in oblique case) ~ Uralic -j* affix of the oblique form of plural nouns. Rejected.

Comment: According to Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §§16.20—16.26, and Chapter 17, §17.83), Proto-Nostratic had the following dual and plural markers:

Dual: k^hi(-nV)*

Plural: -t^ha*

Plural: -ri*

Plural: -k^hu*

Plural: -s^ya*

Plural/collective: -la*

Plural: -nV*

153. (?) -ja-(š[ʌ])* formant of comparative degree: Kartvelian -e-(is₁), -a- affix of comparative degree of the type (h)u-e-is₁* ~ Indo-European -jes-/-is- suffix of comparative degree. Rejected.

Comment: According to Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 17, §17.8.1) adjectives did not exist as an independent grammatical category in Proto-Nostratic. Instead, he notes that intransitive verbs could function as “adjectives”. Bomhard further claims that “adjectives” were differentiated from nouns by syntactical means — a noun placed before another noun functioned as an attribute to the latter.

154. (?) kala* ‘vessel’: Hamito-Semitic kl* ‘vessel, pot’ ~ Dravidian kala* ‘vessel made of leaves; pot’ ~ Altaic [kala-* ‘cauldron’]. Weak.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:638—639) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kałpa* (= kal^vpa*) ‘a kind of vessel’ to account for the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. Proto-Altaic initial k-* reflects Proto-Nostratic initial ejective k’-. Moreover, Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak reconstruct a medial palatalized liquid -ł- (= -ly-), which does not agree with the unpalatalized medial liquid -l- required by the forms from the other branches of Nostratic. Therefore, the Altaic forms should be removed.
2. Inasmuch as Bomhard (no. 359) includes the Dravidian forms (together with Afrasian forms) in the following Proto-Nostratic etymology, Illič-Svityč’s proposal is suspect:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) gal-a* ‘pot, vessel’

155. kal^ʌ* ‘fish’: Hamito-Semitic kl-* ‘fish’ ~ Uralic kala* ‘fish’ ~ Altaic [kali-ma* ‘whale’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:637) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kalu* ‘a kind of fish’. Proto-Altaic initial k-/* is derived from a Proto-Nostratic initial ejective kʼ-/*, which means that this form cannot be included here.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:848) also reconstruct Proto-Altaic kʷula* (= kʰula*) ‘a kind of big fish’. This may belong here, if we assume that an original initial labiovelar has left a trace in the coloring of the vowel of the first syllable: kʷha-/* > kʰu-/*. This is, however, extremely speculative. Note: According to Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:848), this is the source of the Mongolian forms cited by Illič-Svityč. They consider the Tungusic forms cited by Illič-Svityč to be borrowed from Mongolian.
3. Furthermore, Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:789) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kʷile* (= kʰile*) ‘a kind of fish or lizard’. This definitely does not belong here.
4. Bomhard (no. 518) adds the following Proto-Indo-European form to this etymology: kʷhalo-* ‘large fish’ (traditional reconstruction = kʷalo-* or qʷalo-*). This requires that an initial labiovelar be reconstructed in the Proto-Nostratic form.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) kʷhal-a* ‘a large fish’:

156. kalʼa* ‘to strip bark, to skin’: Indo-European gol-* ‘bare, bald’ ~ Uralic kalʼa* ‘film, thin skin; bare, smooth’ ~ kał-* ‘to strip skin’ ~ Altaic kalʼi/-* ‘to strip; bark; bare’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:660—661) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kelʷo* (= kelʷʷo*) ‘bald; bald spot’. Bomhard (no. 468) prefers the traditional Proto-Altaic reconstruction kalʷ-* ‘bald-headed; white spot, blaze on the forehead of an animal’ (cf. Street 1974:16).
2. The evidence from Indo-European and Altaic require that an initial ejective be reconstructed in Proto-Nostratic: kʼ-/. It may be noted that Dolgopolsky (2008:1010—1011, no 1061) correctly reconstructs an initial ejective: Kālʷû ‘bare, naked’. However, when it comes to the Indo-European material he cites, he erroneously compares forms from Latin, Sanskrit, and Farsi (New Persian) and reconstructs Proto-Indo-European kʷHwo-*.
3. Illič-Svityč incorrectly based his reconstruction of the Proto-Indo-European form on the evidence of the Slavic forms he cites. A better reconstruction would be (following the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism): Proto-Indo-European k'al-wo-, k'al-Ho- ‘bald, naked’ (traditional gal-: galyo-s, galuā* [cf. Pokorny 1959:349]).

Bomhard (no. 468) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Indo-European and Altaic.

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) k'alʷ-a* ‘bald spot’; (adj.) ‘bald, bare’:

Derivative of:

(vb.) k'alʷ-* ‘to separate, to remove, to strip off or away: to pluck, tear, or pull off or out’;

(n.) k'alʷ-a* ‘separation, removal, stripping off or away, etc.’

Proto-Nostratic root k'alʷ-* (~ k'əʷ-*):

(vb.) k'alʷ-* ‘to separate, to remove, to strip off or away: to pluck, tear, or pull off or out’;

Derivative:

(n.) k'alʷ-a* ‘bald spot’; (adj.) ‘bald, bare’

Note: For the semantic development, cf. Buck 1949:4.93 bald; 4.99 naked, bare.

157. kamu* ‘to seize, to squeeze’: Hamito-Semitic km-* ‘to seize, to take, to squeeze’ ~ Indo-European gem-* ‘to seize, to take, to squeeze’ ~ Uralic kama-lʷ/koma-rʷ (< kamo-) ‘hand; handful’ ~ Dravidian kama ‘to seize, to take hold’ ~ Altaic kamu-* ‘to seize, to take, to squeeze’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:639—640) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kama* ‘to unite together’ as the source of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. This points to an initial ejective in Proto-Nostratic /kʷ-/*. Hence, the Altaic evidence should be removed.
2. Proto-Indo-European gem-* would be k'em-* according to the glottalic model of Indo-European consonantism. It does not belong here. A better comparison would be with the form reconstructed by Gamkrelidze—Ivanov (1995.I:747) as kʰmʰ-* ‘hand (with outstretched fingers)’; Kroonen (2013:207—208) Proto-Germanic handu-* ‘hand’; etc.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:137—138) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kāme* (-ne) ‘hand; palm, flat of the hand’.
4. Even though this etymology contains numerous errors, enough can be salvaged to give it a “possible” rating.

Proto-Nostratic root k^ham-* (~ k^həm-) or q^ham- (~ q^həm-*):
 (vb.) k^ham-* or q^ham-* 'to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch';
 (n.) k^ham-a* or q^ham-a* 'grip, hold, hand(ful); bond, fetter'

158. kanpa* 'soft outgrowth': Hamito-Semitic knPr* 'lip' ~ Indo-European gemb-* 'outgrowth, lip, mushroom' ~ Uralic kampa* 'mushroom'. Rejected.

Comment: The sound correspondences are profoundly flawed and the semantics are unconvincing. This etymology must be disqualified.

159. (Descriptive) karA/kura 'crane': (?) Hamito-Semitic [k(w)rk* 'crane'] ~ Indo-European gerH-* 'crane' ~ Uralic karke/kurke 'crane' ~ Dravidian kor-/kur- 'crane' ~ (?) Altaic [kara-/kura- 'crane']. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian forms cited here must be removed from consideration due to faulty sound correspondences.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:652) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kārV* 'a kind of bird'. This points to an initial ejective in Proto-Nostratic /k'-/, which agrees with the Proto-Indo-European form. Several of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč are listed at the end of their entry for Proto-Altaic gérki 'a kind of pheasant' by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:542), but without any proposals concerning their derivation.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k'or-a* or k'ar-a* 'crane'

160. Kājwa* 'to chew': Indo-European gⁱeu-/gⁱeu- 'to chew' ~ Altaic kāb/ä/* 'to chew'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:667) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kēpu* 'to chew'. This points to Pre-Altaic k'ēp'-* (< Proto-Nostratic k'ep'-* [see below]).

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's etymology, Bomhard (no. 488) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root k'ep'*:-

(vb.) k'ep'*- 'to cut, chop, split, or break into small pieces; to munch, to chew';

(n.) k'ep'-a* 'the act of cutting, chopping, splitting, or breaking into small pieces, the act of mincing; chewing (the cud), rumination'

161. k̄ä/lH/ʌ* 'to go, to wander': (?) Hamito-Semitic klh* 'to wander, to step' ~ Uralic k̄älä* 'to ford, to wander' ~ Dravidian kāl-* 'to go' ~ Altaic [k̄älu-* 'to arrive']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences
2. Orël—Stolbova (1995:310, no. 1418) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian kal-* 'to go' and (1995:310, no. 1420) kalah-* 'to go'.
3. Bomhard (no. 513) reconstructs Proto-Afrasian k^wal-* 'to go, to walk, to move about' based upon evidence from Berber, Cushitic (Saho-Afar), and Chadic.
4. Bomhard (no. 513) rejects the Dravidian evidence adduced by Illič-Svityč and replaces it with the following:

Tamil kulavu (kulavi-) 'to walk, to move about'; Toda kwal- (kwaḍ-) 'to go round and round (millet in a mortar pit, buffaloes in a pen), to frisk about, to run about wasting time'.

5. Bomhard (no. 513) includes the following Indo-European evidence:

Proto-Indo-European k^{wh}el-/k^{wh}ol-/k^{wh}l̥-* 'to go, to walk, to move about': Sanskrit cāratī, calati 'to move one's self, to go, to walk, to move, to stir, to roam about, to wander'; Avestan carāiti 'to go, to move'; Greek πολέω 'to go about, to range over', πολεύω 'to turn about, to go about'.

6. Bomhard (no. 513) rejects the Uralic evidence adduced by Illič-Svityč and replaces it with the following:

Proto-Uralic kulke-* 'to ramble about, to move about, to roam or wander about': Finnish kulke-/kulje- 'to go, to walk, to travel, to stroll, to ramble'; Estonian kulg 'course, process, run, motion, going', kulgema- 'to proceed, to take one's course, to run, to pass'; Lapp / Saami gol'gâ- 'to float (with the current), to run; to shower down; to leak very much; to ramble, to roam, to wander about'; Mordvin kolge- 'to drip, to run; to leak, to be leaky'; Ostyak / Xanty kogəl- 'to walk, to stride'; Zyrian / Komi kylal- 'to float, to drift (on water); to flood; to swim; to travel or drift downstream', kylt- 'to drift or swim with the current'; Hungarian halad- 'to depart, to proceed, to move forward'; Yurak Samoyed / Nenets huuly- 'to swim; to move by ship; to travel downstream'.

Proto-Nostratic root k^{wh}al-* (~ k^{wh}əl-*):
 (vb.) k^{wh}al-* 'to go, to walk, to move about';
 (n.) k^{wh}al-a* 'walking, walk, wandering, roaming'
 Probably identical to:
 (vb.) k^{wh}al-* 'to revolve, to go around, to roll';
 (n.) k^{wh}al-a* 'circle, circuit'

162. kālU* 'female relation': (?) Hamito-Semitic [kl(l)* 'daughter/sister-in-law, bride'] ~ (?) Kartvelian [kal-* 'woman'] ~ Indo-European ǵ_loy-* 'brother's wife' ~ Uralic kālī* 'female relation' ('husband's sister, brother's wife, etc. '); 'sister's husband' ~ Dravidian [kal- 'wife of father's brother, aunt'] ~ Altaic kālī(n)* 'wife of younger brother or son; sister's husband'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. The etymology cannot stand as written.
2. The Indo-European evidence adduced by Illič-Svityč must be removed. Proto-Indo-European /ǵ-/* (= /k'-/* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) does not come from Proto-Nostratic initial /k-/*.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:659) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kele* (~ -i, -o) 'daughter-in-law, bride'.
4. Bomhard separates this entry into two separate etymologies, based upon their phonology: (1) Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^hal-a* 'female in-law' and (2) Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) k'el-a* 'female in-law: husband's sister, sister-in-law; daughter-in-law' (see below).

Bomhard (no. 407) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^hal-a* 'female in-law':
 Note also:
 (n.) k'el-a* 'female in-law'

Bomhard (no. 486) also reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Indo-European and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) k'el-a* 'female in-law: husband's sister, sister-in-law; daughter-in-law':
 Note also:
 (n.) k^hal-a* 'female in-law'

163. kEN*Λ ‘to know’: Hamito-Semitic k(j)n* ‘to know, to recognize’ ~ Kartvelian gen-* ‘to understand, to recognize, to feel’ ~ Indo-European ĝenh^{u-}/ĝneh^{u-}* ‘to know’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

Proto-Nostratic root k’an^{v-}* (~ k’an^{v-}*):

(vb.) k’an^{v-}* ‘to observe, to perceive’;

(n.) k’an^{v-}-a* ‘the act of observing, perceiving; that which observes, perceives: eye; perception, observation, recognition, comprehension’.

164. (Descriptive) k/iH*Λ ‘to sing’: Indo-European /g/eiH-* ‘to sing, to scream’ ~ Uralic kīγΛ-* ‘to make a mating call, to sing’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

165. (?) kirH*Λ ‘old’: Indo-European ĝerH-* ‘old, decrepid’ ~ Dravidian [kīr(a)* ‘old’]. Rejected.

Comment: Illič-Svityč has confused two separate, unrelated Proto-Nostratic stems here: (A) Proto-Nostratic k’er-* ‘to decay, to wear out, to wither, to waste away, to become old’; (B) Proto-Nostratic gir^{v-}* ‘to be or become old’ (see below). The first is the source of the Indo-European form he cites, while the second is the source of the Dravidian form.

- A. As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 489) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Indo-European and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root (Eurasianic only) k’er-*:

(vb.) k’er-* ‘to decay, to wear out, to wither, to waste away, to become old’;

(n.) k’er-a* ‘old age, old person’; (adj.) ‘decayed, worn out, withered, wasted, old’

- B. As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 487) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and (?) Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic root g^hir^y-* (~ ger^y-*):
 (vb.) g^hir^y-* 'to be or become old';
 (n.) g^hir^y-a* 'old age, old person'; (adj.) 'old'

Note: Bomhard (no. 487) suggests that the following Indo-European evidence (from Germanic) may belong here:

Proto-Indo-European g^hir-eH-* (> g^hir-ē-) 'gray-haired, old': Proto-Germanic ǰrǣwaz 'gray, gray-haired' > Old Icelandic grár 'gray, gray-haired'; Faroese gráur 'gray'; Norwegian graa 'gray'; Danish graa 'gray'; Old Swedish grā 'gray' (Modern Swedish grå 'gray'); Old English grǣg 'gray'; Old Frisian grē 'gray'; Dutch grauw 'gray'; Old High German grāo 'gray' (New High German grau 'gray').

166. kiwi* 'stone': (?) Hamito-Semitic [kw* 'stone'] ~ Kartvelian kw-a* 'stone' ~ Uralic kiwe* 'stone'. Strong.

Comment: The Afrasian evidence proposed by Illič-Svityč should be removed.

Bomhard (no. 445) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Kartvelian and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^hiw-a* 'stone'

167. koja* 'moth, caterpillar': Uralic koja* 'moth' ~ Altaic kuja* 'moth, larva of gadfly'. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:741) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kú^hne* (= kún^ve*) 'moth, worm'. Given the revised Proto-Altaic reconstruction proposed by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak, based upon more copious data from the Altaic daughter languages, this entry must be disqualified.

168. kojHa* 'fatty, plump' health': Indo-European g^uei^h-/g^uje^h- 'to be healthy, to live' ~ Uralic kōja* 'fat, fatty'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. The semantics are also problematic.
2. The alleged Proto-Indo-European cognate requires an initial labiovelar ejective k^w-* in Proto-Nostratic (taking into consideration the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism).

169. (?) kojHa* 'skin, leather, bark': Indo-European g^ueiH-* 'skin, leather' ~ Uralic koja* 'bark, rind, crust'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Though the semantics are quite good, the sound correspondences are faulty.
2. The alleged Proto-Indo-European cognate requires an initial labiovelar ejective */kʷ-/ in Proto-Nostratic (taking into consideration the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism).
3. This entry is a prime example of how Illič-Svityč's etymology can be essentially correct but the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is wrong.

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) *kʷoy-a 'outer covering: skin, hide, leather; bark (of a tree), shell, crust'

170. (?) *kojw/a/ 'birch': Uralic *kojwλ 'birch' ~ Altaic *kīb(a) 'birch'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — Proto-Uralic medial */-oj-/ does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial */-ī-/ , and Proto-Uralic medial */-w-/ does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial */-b-/. Acceptable semantics.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:676) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *kība 'a kind of foliage tree'. They note: "The reflexes point to a tree with distinct bright bark, probably birch."

171. (?) *koλa 'to skin, to strip': Uralic *kodʼλ/*kuδʼλ 'to skin, to strip' ~ Altaic [*koLa 'to skin']. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:851) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *kʷúla (= *kʰúlʷa) 'bark, scales; scab'. They point out that Manchu qola- 'to skin' and Evenki kūlū- 'to skin' are loanwords from Mongolian.
2. If this entry is a valid etymology, the lack of cognates in Afrasian, or Kartvelian, or Dravidian means that this can only be reconstructed as far back as Proto-Eurasianic, not Proto-Nostratic.
3. According to Bomhard's system, this form should be reconstructed as follows (with medial lateralized affricate ejective */-tʃʷ-/): Proto-Eurasianic (vb.) *kʰutʃʷ- (~ *kʰotʃʷ-) 'to skin, to remove bark', (n.) *kʰutʃʷ-a 'tree bark'.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book).

172. *kora 'anger, spiritual pain': Hamito-Semitic *k(w)r 'to be angry, to suffer' ~ Dravidian *kora 'to be angry' ~ Altaic *kōra 'anger, shame, pain'. Possible.

Comments:

1. This is another case of where I am giving Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt.
2. The Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč imply a Proto-Altaic k^h/ō/ra* (= k^h/ō/ra*) with initial voiceless velar aspirate /k^h-/, which means that the comparison with Afrasian k(w)r is possible.
3. Orël—Stolbova (1995:323—324) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian kor-* 'to be angry'.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book).

173. (?) kOr'i* 'lamb, sheep': Hamito-Semitic kr* 'lamb, young ram' ~ Dravidian kor̥i/kuri 'sheep' ~ Altaic kur'i-/kor'i- 'lamb'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:808—809) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k^hǰōro* (= k^hǰōr^yo*) 'lamb, deer'.
2. The Altaic evidence (medial /-ř-/) points to a medial /-r^y-/ in Proto-Nostratic. This means the expected reflex in Dravidian should be kor̥i/kuri 'sheep'. Such a form is not found in Burrows—Emeneau 1984, though the forms cited by Illič-Svityč are listed under entry no. 2165. The Dravidian material is not an exact match and is, therefore, suspect.
3. The reconstruction of initial /k^h-/* (= /k^h-/*) in Proto-Altaic by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak means that the comparison with the Afrasian (Semitic, Berber, and Chadic [Angas]) evidence presented by Illič-Svityč is possible.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book).

174. küda* 'male relation': Uralic küδü* 'wife's husband, husband's or wife's brother' ~ Altaic küdä/kuda (< küda*) 'relationship by marriage, father of son/daughter-in-law, brother/son-in-law'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Uralic medial /-δ-/* does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial /-d-/*.

175. (?) küjñA* 'to bend at the joints': Indo-European ĝenu-/ĝneu- 'knee' ~ Uralic küjñä-(ră)* 'elbow, bone, forearm' ~ Dravidian kūn-* 'hump'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. In accordance with the glottalic model of Indo-European consonatism, the Proto-Indo-European form points to an initial ejective /k'-/* in Proto-Nostratic.

Dravidian, Indo-European, and Altaic (cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak [2003: 664—665] Proto-Altaic kēñā* [= kēnʷa*] ‘front leg, armpit, angle’):

Proto-Nostratic (n.) kʷenʷ-a* ‘knot, joint’.

176. kūlʷ* ‘freeze, cold’: (?) Kartvelian kwer-/kwel-* ‘to cool’ ~ Uralic küLmä* ‘cold, frost, freeze’ ~ Dravidian [kuʷlʷ-* ‘cold’] ~ Altaic Kölʷ(ʷ)* ‘freeze’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Kartvelian material should be removed. Proto-Kartvelian initial /kw-/* points to an initial labiovelar in Proto-Nostratic /k^{wh}-/*.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:716—717) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kolʷi* (= kolʷi*) (~ k^h-, -j-, -e*) ‘to freeze’. Proto-Altaic initial /k-/* points to Proto-Nostratic initial /kʷ-/*.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:663) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian kilmä* (kūlmä*) ‘cold; frost, coldness; to become cold, to freeze, to be frozen’; Sammallahti (1988: 552) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian kūlmä* ‘cold’

Proto-Nostratic root kʷulʷ-* (~ kʷolʷ-*):

(vb.) kʷulʷ-* ‘to be or become cold; to freeze’;

(n.) kʷulʷ-a* ‘cold, coldness, chill, frost’

177. kūtā* ‘small lake, reservoir’: Hamito-Semitic kwl* ‘reservoir, lake, river’ ~ Uralic k/ä/ʷ* ‘lake, river, bay’ ~ Dravidian kUʷa-* ‘reservoir, pond’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty vowel correspondences — Proto-Uralic /ä/* does not correspond to Proto-Dravidian /u/*.
 2. Rédei (1986—1988:134—135) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kälz* ‘bay, (marshy) lake’.
 3. Krishnamurti (2003:13, 526) reconstructs Proto-Dravidian kuʷ-am/-Vnc-* ‘lake’.
178. küni* ‘wife, woman’: Hamito-Semitic k(w)n/knw ‘one of the wives in polygamy’ ~ Indo-European g^uen-* ‘wife, woman’ ~ Altaic küni* ‘one of the wives in polygamy’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences: Proto-Afrasian initial */k-/ does not correspond either to Proto-Indo-European initial */g^u-/ (this would be */k^w-/ under the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) or to Proto-Altai initial */k-/ (< Proto-Nostratic */k'-/ or */k^w-/).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:739—740) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic kune* (~ g-) 'one of several wives'.
3. The Afrasian forms should be removed.

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's etymology, Bomhard (no. 539) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Indo-European and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) k^wan-a* 'woman, wife'

Derivative of:

(vb.) k^wan-* 'to suckle, to nurse; to suck'; (n.) k^wan-* 'udder, bosom, breast'

In addition, Bomhard (no. 538) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian and Dravidian:

Proto-Nostratic root k^wan-* (~ k^wən-*):

(vb.) k^wan-* 'to suckle, to nurse; to suck'; (n.) k^wan-a* 'udder, bosom, breast'

Derivative:

(n.) k^wan-a* 'woman, wife'

179. küta* 'snake, worm': Hamito-Semitic [kwl* 'snake, worm'] ~ (?) Kartvelian gwel-* 'snake' ~ Altaic [kuli-* 'snake, worm']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Kartvelian initial */gw-/ does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian initial */k-/. Proto-Kartvelian initial */gw-/ points to Proto-Nostratic initial */g^w-/.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:736) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic kulV* (~ -o-, -ĭ-) 'snake, worm'. Proto-Altaiic initial */k-/ points to Proto-Nostratic initial ejective */k'-/.
3. Illič-Svityč bases the reconstruction of Proto-Afrasian kwl* 'snake, worm' exclusively on material from Chadic. Orël—Stolbova (1994:326, no. 1495), on the other hand, reconstruct Proto-Afrasian kulup-* 'worm, crocodile', based upon material from Semitic and Ancient Egyptian — it must be admitted, however, that their etymology seems a bit contrived from a semantic point of view. Ehret (1995) does not have a comparable entry.

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's etymology, Bomhard (no. 507) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Kartvelian and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) g^wal-a* 'snake'

180. (?) kama* 'biting insect': Hamito-Semitic km-/gm-* 'biting insect (louse, flea, tick) ~ Altaic [kōmi* 'biting insect (louse, ant, beetle)']. Rejected.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:738—739) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kumi* 'a kind of insect'. Proto-Altaic initial /k-/* points to Proto-Nostratic initial ejective /k'-/, which does not yield either Proto-Afrasian initial /k-/ or /g-/* — the expected reflex in Proto-Afrasian is initial /k'-/*.

181. (?) kača* 'to advance with effort' (> 'to run, to crawl'): Uralic k/a/če-* 'to run, to crawl' ~ Altaic [Kača-* 'to crawl?']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:667—668) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian koče-* 'to go slowly, to crawl'.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:751—752) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'āču* (= khāču*) 'to run, to drive' as the source of some of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. For the meaning 'to crawl', they reconstruct the following Proto-Altaic forms: (1) jōmke* 'to crawl, to move' (2003:606) and (2) p'ōba* (= phōba*) 'to crawl, to squat' (2003:1164).
3. Considering all of the Uralic evidence cited by Rédei, on the one hand, and all of the Altaic evidence cited by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak, on the other hand, the semantics are too divergent to support Illič-Svityč's etymology.

182. Keja* 'to do': Dravidian kej-* 'to do' ~ Altaic kī-* 'to do'. Strong.

Comment: Even though the evidence cited by Illič-Svityč from Dravidian and Altaic fully support his etymology, the Proto-Nostratic form he reconstructs needs to be revised to reflect the additional material cited by Bomhard (see below).

Proto-Nostratic root k^whey-*:

(vb.) k^whey-* 'to do, to make, to create; to form, to fashion'

(n.) k^whey-a* 'act, deed, creation'

183. (?) Koki* 'to track, to follow': Uralic koke-* 'to look around, to notice, to find' ~ Altaic [Koga* 'to track, to follow, to pursue']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Lax semantics.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:171) reconstructs Proto-Uralic koke-* 'to see, to notice, to find'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:554) reconstruct Proto-Altaic giō[k]ó* 'to run, to send' as the source of the Altaic evidence cited by Illič-Svityč.

184. Kumä* 'overturned': Uralic kuma* 'overturned' ~ Altaic Köm(ä)* 'overturned'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Uralic medial /-u-/* does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial /-jō-/* reconstructed by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (see below).
2. Rédei (1986—1988:201—202) reconstructs Proto-Uralic kuma* 'bent (down), bowed (down); inverted position; to be bent (down)'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:504—505) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'jōme* (= k^hjōme*) 'to throw (upside down)' as the source of the Altaic material cited by Illič-Svityč. Note that they reconstruct Proto-Altaic initial /k^c-/* (= k^h-/*) here.

Even though this etymology is not in Bomhard (this book) in the form proposed by Illič-Svityč, Bomhard (no. 502) proposes a different etymology with similar, though not quite identical, meaning based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Uralic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Eskimo-Aleut (Bomhard does not include Altaic — the initial /k^c-/* [= k^h-/] reconstructed by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak for Proto-Altaic [see above] cannot be derived from the Proto-Nostratic initial /k'-/ required on the basis of the evidence from the other Nostratic daughter languages [especially from Afrasian: Semitic, Berber, and North Omotic, which points to Proto-Afrasian k'um-* 'to bend', to judge by the North Omotic vowel]):

Proto-Nostratic root k'um-* (~ k'om-*):

- (vb.) k'um-* 'to bend, to curve; to bend the head or body, to bow or stoop down'
 (n.) k'um-a* 'bend, curve; the act of bending, bowing, stooping'

Identical to:

- (n.) k'um-a* 'a bent or curved object: hollow, cavity; knob, lump, hump; etc.'

Bomhard (no. 503) also reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic (different from the Altaic evidence adduced by Illič-Svityč):

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k'um-a* ‘a bent or curved object: hollow, cavity; knob, lump, hump; etc.’

185. KuPśa* ‘to put out, to extinguish’: Indo-European g^ues-* ‘to go out’ ~ Uralic kupsa-/kopsa-* ‘to go out’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Indo-European medial /-s/* does not correspond to Proto-Uralic medial /-ps/*.

Proto-Nostratic root k'was-* (~ k'wəs-*):

(vb.) k'was-* ‘to strike fire, to put out (fire)’

(n.) k'was-a* ‘spark, fire’

186. (?) Ku/s/i* ‘to fall’: Uralic ku/ś/e-* ‘to fall’ ~ Dravidian kuc(i)-* ‘to fall; lower’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Collinder (1960:410) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kuśō-* or kućō-* as the source of Lapp / Saami gáč'čâ- ‘to fall’, and this no doubt served as the basis for Illič-Svityč’s Proto-Uralic reconstruction. The Lapp / Saami form is not listed in either Rédei 1986—1988 or Sammallahti 1988. The Uralic documentation is very limited. This seems to indicate that this is probably not a credible Uralic etymology.
2. I would like to give Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt here, but there are just too many uncertainties involved, and it is better to err on the side of caution.

187. (?) KümTä* ‘fog’: Uralic kümtä* ‘fog, smoke’ ~ Altaic küda-* ‘fog’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Uralic medial /-mt-/* does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial /-d-/. Moreover, Proto-Uralic medial /-ü-/ does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial /-č-/* (according to Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak’s Proto-Altaic reconstruction — see below).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:771) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ədò* (= k^hédò*) ‘wind, fog’.

188. Küt*Λ ‘to tie up, to bind’: Uralic kütke*- ‘to tie, to bind’ ~ Dravidian kut*Λ ‘to tie, to tighten’. Rejected.

Comment: Based upon the evidence cited by Illič-Svityč, there is absolutely no justification for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic medial */-t-/ (= */-t’-/).

189. -k-* nominal diminutive suffix: Kartvelian -k-* (-ak-, -ik-) diminutive suffix ~ Indo-European -k-* diminutive suffix ~ Uralic -kka*/-kkä* diminutive suffix ~ Altaic -ka*/-kä* diminutive suffix. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Questionable morphological analysis — the derivational suffixes cited by Illič-Svityč typically are multi-functional in the various Nostratic daughter languages, and those functions do not systematically correspond when compared across languages. This makes it difficult to ascertain the precise functions of the derivational suffixes in Proto-Nostratic. Nonetheless, there is enough here to warrant further examination. For a comprehensive discussion of Nostratic derivational morphology, cf. Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 18.
 2. Aikio (to appear, pp. 36—37), as the latest treatment of the subject, lists various derivational suffixes, together with their functions, that are probably to be reconstructed for Proto-Uralic. The Uralic diminutive suffix cited by Illič-Svityč is not included by Aikio. However, it is mentioned by Raun (1988:565) and, of course, Collinder (1960:258—259).
 3. The phonology of the Uralic forms is ambiguous.
 4. The Proto-Indo-European diminutive suffix cited by Illič-Svityč cannot be compared with the Kartvelian diminutive suffix. The Proto-Indo-European suffix points to Proto-Nostratic */-k^h-/, while the Proto-Kartvelian suffix points to Proto-Nostratic */-k’-/. Or, to put it another way, Proto-Indo-European */-k-/ is not the regular reflex of Proto-Nostratic */-ḳ-/ (= */-k’-/).
 5. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:173—220, summary on p. 220) identify the following Proto-Altaic derivational suffixes that should be considered here: (A) -k-* = (a) denominative nominal; (b) suffix of small animals; (B) -ḳ-* (= -k^h-*) = (a) attributive (> denominative nominal), (b) diminutive, and (c) deverbative verbal. Proto-Altaic */-k-/ points to Proto-Nostratic */-ḳ-/ (= */-k’-/, while Proto-Altaic */-ḳ’-/ (= */-k^h-/) points to Proto-Nostratic */-k^h-/.
 6. Of the two competing derivational suffixes joined together by Illič-Svityč in this entry, namely, (A) Proto-Nostratic */-ḳ-/ (= */-k’-/) and (B) Proto-Nostratic */-k^h-/, Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.44) only very tentatively assigns diminutive function to the former (A).
190. (Descriptive) ḳaba*/ḳap’a* ‘to seize’: Hamito-Semitic qb-* ‘to seize, to take, to bite’ ~ Kartvelian ḳb-* ‘to bite’ ~ Indo-European ghabh-/kap- ‘to seize, to take, to hold' ~ Uralic kappλ-* 'to seize' ~ Dravidian kavv-/kapp-* 'to seize (with the mouth), to grab' ~ Altaic k'aba-/k'apa-* 'to seize'. Possible.

Comments:

1. I do not understand why this entry is labeled as “descriptive” (дескрипт.).
2. Illič-Svityč has confused three separate, but semantically-similar, Proto-Nostratic stems here — they are:

- A. Bomhard (no. 353) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic root gab-* (~ gəb-*):

(vb.) gab-* 'to grasp, to seize'

(n.) gab-a* 'hand, arm'

- B. Bomhard (no. 419) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Elamite, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic root k^hap^h-*:

(vb.) k^hap^h-* 'to take, seize, or grasp with the hand; to press or squeeze with the hand'

(n.) k^hap^h-a* 'hand'

- C. Bomhard (no. 455) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and Kartvelian:

Proto-Nostratic root k'ab-* (~ k'əb-*):

(vb.) k'ab-* 'to seize, to take hold of; to seize with the teeth, to bite'

(n.) k'ab-a* 'seizure, grasp, grip, hold; bite'

191. kačλ* 'man, youth': Kartvelian kac₁-* 'man, husband' ~ Uralic k/a/Čλ* 'youth, man'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1998:86—87) and Fähnrich (2007:224) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian kac₁-* 'man, male, husband'.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:110) reconstructs Proto-Uralic kača* 'young, unmarried man'.
3. I am rating this entry as “possible” instead of “strong” because there is a problem with the phonology. Proto-Kartvelian /c₁/* usually corresponds to Proto-Uralic /č/* rather than Proto-Uralic /ć/*. Nonetheless, the semantics are a good match.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book).

192. ka*Δ ‘to weave, to plait (with twigs)’: Hamito-Semitic qd-* ‘to form pots; to build’ ~ Kartvelian ked-* ‘to build’ ~ Indo-European ket-* ‘(plaited) structure, vessel’ ~ Dravidian kaṭṭ-* ‘to tie, to build; plaited structure, vessel’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed from this entry. Proto-Indo-European */k/ does not correspond either to Proto-Afrasian */q/ (= */k’/) or to Proto-Kartvelian */k̥/ (= */k’/). Likewise, Proto-Indo-European */t/ does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian */d/, Proto-Kartvelian */d/, or Proto-Dravidian */t/. The Proto-Indo-European form is best derived from the following Proto-Nostratic forms reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Indo-European (cf. Bomhard, no. 433):

Proto-Nostratic root kʰath-* (~ kʰəth-*):

(vb.) kʰath-* ‘to plait, to weave, to twist’;

(n.) kʰath-a* ‘that which is plaited, woven, twisted: mat, net, knot’

Derivative:

(n.) kʰath-a* ‘rag, cloth’

2. The following Proto-Altaiic form should be added to this etymology: kādū* ‘a kind of harness (bridle)’ (cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003:629).

Proto-Nostratic root kʰad-* (~ kʰəd-*):

(vb.) kʰad-* ‘to tie, to fasten; to build, to construct’;

(n.) kʰad-a* ‘tie, band, fastening’

193. (Descriptive) kaHP*Δ ‘to chop, to dig’: (?) Hamito-Semitic kHP* ‘to dig, to chop, to cut’ ~ Kartvelian kāp-/kēp-* ‘to chop, to cut’ ~ Indo-European ke(h)p-* ‘to chop, to cut’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Neither Proto-Afrasian initial */k-/ nor Proto-Indo-European initial */k-/ correspond to Proto-Kartvelian initial */k̥-/ (= */k’-/). Elsewhere (see entries no. 192 above and no. 195 below, for example), Illič-Svityč (correctly) compares Proto-Afrasian initial */q-/ (= */k’-/) with Proto-Kartvelian initial */k̥-/ (= */k’-/).

194. ka*λa ‘to depart, to leave, to abandon’: (?) Kartvelian [kel-* ‘to depart, to remain’] ~ Uralic kaδ’a-* ‘to abandon’ ~ Dravidian kaṭṭ-/kaṭa-* ‘to go by, to pass, to cross over, to abandon’ ~ Altaic kʰala-* ‘to remain, to wait’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Nostratic initial */k̥-/ (= */kʰ-/) does not become initial */kʰ-/ (= */kʰ-/) in Proto-Altaic. Thus, either the Proto-Kartvelian form or the Proto-Altaic form must be removed from this etymology.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:115—116) reconstructs Proto-Uralic *kaδʼa- ‘to leave, to abandon; to stay’, while Sammallahti (1988) reconstructs Proto-Uralic *kâdʼâ- ‘to leave’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:756—757) reconstruct Proto-Altaic *kʼala (~ -u) (= *kʰala) ‘to wait, to be late’.
4. We can cite the semantic range found in Tamil as representative of Dravidian as a whole (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:104, no. 1109): Tamil kaṭa (-pp-, -nt-) ‘to pass through, to traverse, to cross, to exceed, to excel, to win, to overcome, to transgress; to go, to proceed, to pass (as time, water, clouds, etc.)’. As can be seen, the semantics are not a close match for what is found in the forms cited by Illič-Svityč from the remaining Nostratic daughter languages.

195. *k̥apʼʌ ‘nape of the neck, head’ ~ Hamito-Semitic *qP ‘nape of the neck, hear’ ~ Kartvelian *k̥epa ‘nape of the neck, skull’ ~ Indo-European *k/a/p- ‘head, skull’. Possible.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. As pointed out many times already, Proto-Indo-European initial */k-/ does not correspond either to Proto-Afrasian initial */q-/ (= */kʰ-/) or Proto-Kartvelian initial */k̥-/ (= */kʰ-/). Thus, the Proto-Indo-European form should be removed from this etymology. It belongs with the following Nostratic etymology instead (cf. Bomhard, no. 420), reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) *kʰapʰ-a ‘bowl, cup, jar, container; skull’

Proto-Nostratic (n.) *kʰapʰ-a ‘nape of the neck, back of the head’

196. *k̥äc̥ä ‘to cut’: Hamito-Semitic *qs ‘to cut, to beat, to break’ ~ Kartvelian [*k̥ac̥- ‘to cut, to chop’] ~ Indo-European *k̥es- ‘to cut’ ~ Uralic *k̥äc̥/*k̥eč̥ä ‘knife, edge, point’ ~ (?) Dravidian *kacc- ‘to bite, to sting’ ~ Altaic [*kʰäsä- ‘to cut’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Without having yet reached the end of this review, it should be perfectly clear already that Illič-Svityč is far too lax in his adherence to his own sound laws. As an aside, it may be noted that Dolgopolsky is even less methodologically rigorous (see Bomhard 2009 for details). From this point on, I am just going to note “faulty sound correspondences”, without repeating what has already been discussed. However, I will mention particulars when there is something new or important to note.

2. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed from this etymology. It belongs with the following Nostratic etymology instead (cf. Bomhard, no. 431), reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root k^has-* (~ k^həs-*):

(vb.) k^has-* ‘to cut or break off, to divide, to separate’;

(n.) k^has-a* ‘cut, separation, division, break; cutting, clipping, fragment, piece, bit’

197. k̄āra* ‘to tie tightly’ ~ (?) Hamito-Semitic kr* ‘to tie, to wrap’ ~ Kartvelian k̄ar-/k̄er- ‘to tie’ ~ Indo-European k̄er-* ‘to tie’ ~ Uralic kar^Λ* ‘to tie tightly, to wrap up’ ~ Dravidian [kaɾ-* ‘to tie tightly, to tighten’] ~ Altaic k̄āra^Λ* ‘to tie tightly, to tighten’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Illič-Svityč has confused two separate Proto-Nostratic stems in this etymology (see below for details).
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:669—670) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k̄era* (~ -r̄) ‘to bind, to wind around’. Proto-Altaic initial /k-/* points to Proto-Nostratic initial /k’-/*.
4. The Proto-Indo-European form cited by Illič-Svityč should be removed, since it points to Proto-Nostratic k^har-, with an initial aspirated velar, instead of the Proto-Nostratic initial ejective /k̄-/ (= /k’-/*) reconstructed by Illič-Svityč. A better Indo-European comparison here would be the following (cf. Bomhard, no. 481):

Proto-Indo-European k’er-/*k’or-/k’r- (vb.) to twist, to turn, to bend, to wind; to tie (together), to bind; (adj.) curved, bent, crooked; tied, bound; (n.) that which is tied or bound together: bunch, bundle’: Sanskrit grathna-h ‘bunch, tuft’, granth-, grathnāmi, grantháyati ‘to fasten, to tie or string together’, grantha-h ‘tying, binding, stringing together, knot’, granthi-h ‘a knot, tie, knot of a cord; bunch or protuberance’; Prakrit gam̐thai, gam̐thai ‘to tie, to knot’, gam̐thi- ‘knot, joint, bundle’, gam̐thilla- ‘knotted’; Assamese gā̐thi- ‘knot, joint, protuberance’, gā̐thiba- ‘to string together’; Greek γρῦπός ‘hook-nosed’; Latin grūmus ‘a little heap, hillock (of earth)’; Old Irish grinne ‘bundle’; Old Icelandic krá, kró ‘nook, corner’, kring

‘round’, kringja ‘to encircle, to surround’, kringr ‘circle, ring’, krókr ‘hook, barb’, kryppil ‘cripple’, krækja ‘to hook’; Old English crampiht ‘crumpled, wrinkled’, crumb, crump ‘crooked’, crymbing ‘curvature, bend, inclination’, crympan ‘to curl’, cranc-stæf ‘weaving implement, crank’, cryppan ‘to bend, to crook (finger)’, crymban ‘to bend’, cradol ‘cradle’; Old Saxon krumb ‘crooked, bent, curved, twisted’; Dutch krom ‘crooked, bent, curved, twisted’; Old High German kratto ‘basket’ (New High German [dial.] Kratten, Kretten), krezzo ‘basket’ (New High German Krätze), krumb ‘crooked, bent, curved, twisted’ (New High German krumm); Lithuanian gárbana, garbanà ‘curl, lock, ringlet’, grandis ‘ring, link (of a fence)’.

5. The Proto-Afrasian form should also be removed. Both it and the Proto-Indo-European form, together with evidence from Dravidian and Uralic, are derived from the following Proto-Nostratic forms instead (cf. Bomhard, no. 424):

Proto-Nostratic root k^har-* (~ k^hər-*):

(vb.) k^har-* ‘to twist, turn, spin, or wind around’;

(n.) k^har-a* ‘ring, circle, curve’; (adj.) ‘round, curved, twisted’

Possible derivative:

(n.) k^har-a* ‘edge, side, bank’

Proto-Nostratic root k’ar-* (~ k’ər-*):

(vb.) k’ar-* ‘to twist, to turn, to bend, to wind; to tie (together), to bind’;

(n.) k’ar-a* ‘that which is tied or bound together: bunch, bundle’; (adj.) ‘bent, curved, crooked; tied, bound’

Possible derivative:

(n.) k’ar-a* ‘protuberance, lump, hump, breast’

198. kel* ‘to be insufficient’: Kartvelian kel-/k^hal-* ‘to be insufficient, to need’ ~ Uralic kelke* ‘to be insufficient, to be needed’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The sound correspondences are perfect here.
2. Klimov (1998:85) reconstructs (A) Proto-Kartvelian k^hal-/k^hl-* ‘to lack, to be short of’ and (B) (1998:89) Proto-Kartvelian kel-/k^hl-* ‘to lack, to be short of’, while Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:189) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian kel-/k^hl-, and Fähnrich (2007:228) reconstructs kel-/k^hl-, with the same meaning. In addition, Klimov (1998:123) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian m-k^hl-e-* ‘missing, deprived’, while Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:241—242) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian mkle-, and Fähnrich (2007: 292—293) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian mkle-, with the same meaning. See also Schmidt 1962:124—125.

3. Rédei (1986—1988:145) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kelke-* ‘to be in need; must, shall’, while Sammallahti (1988:543) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kelki-* ‘must’.

Proto-Nostratic root k'al-* (~ k'əl-*):

(vb.) k'al-* ‘to take away, to remove, to deprive of; to decrease, to diminish, to reduce; to be or become reduced or diminished’;

(n.) k'al-a* ‘littleness, small quantity, scarcity; few things; lack, want, poverty, deficiency, insufficiency’; (adj.) ‘little, scanty, sparse, meager, insufficient, lacking, short of, wanting, needy’

199. (Descriptive) kerjä* ‘to scream’: Hamito-Semitic qr(j)* ‘to scream, to call’ ~ Kartvelian kīr-/kīl- ‘to scream’ ~ Uralic kerjä-* ‘to ask’ ~ Dravidian kīr-* ‘to scream, to call’ ~ Altaic [k'Ēri-* ‘to call’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. In addition to the usual problems, the vowels do not match in this entry.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:781—782) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ēro* (= k'hēro*) ‘to shout, to speak’.
3. Proto-Altaic initial /k'-/* (= /k^h-/) points to Proto-Nostratic initial /k^h-/, not to Proto-Nostratic initial /k-/* (= /k'-/*) reconstructed by Illič-Svityč.

Proto-Nostratic root k'ar-* (~ k'ər-*):

(vb.) k'ar-* ‘to shout, to screech, to call (out to), to cry (out)’;

(n.) k'ar-a* ‘call, cry, invocation, proclamation; roar, lamentation’

200. kErda* ‘breast, heart’: Kartvelian m-kerd-* ‘breast’ ~ Indo-European kērd-* ‘heart’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč's etymology, Bomhard (no. 482) suggests that the Proto-Kartvelian form is to be derived from the following

Proto-Nostratic form, reconstructed based upon evidence from Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k'ar-a* 'protuberance, lump, hump, breast':

Possibly derived from (in the sense 'curved shape, swelling'):

(vb.) k'ar-* 'to twist, to turn, to bend, to wind; to tie (together), to bind';

(n.) k'ar-a* 'that which is tied or bound together: bunch, bundle'; (adj.) 'bent, curved, crooked; tied, bound'

As for the Proto-Indo-European word for 'heart', which Illič-Svityč gives as k̑erd-*, it is descended from the following Proto-Nostratic form (cf. Bomhard, no. 430), based upon evidence from Dravidian and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^har-a* 'heart, core, essence'

201. k̑o/* post-positional intensifying and conjoining particle: Hamito-Semitic k̑(w)* conjoining particle ~ Kartvelian kwe* intensifying and affirming particle ~ Indo-European k^ue* conjoining and intensifying particle ~ Uralic -ka/-kä intensifying and conjoining particle ~ Altaic -ka* intensifying particle. Strong.

Comment: There is absolutely no basis whatsoever for reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic initial ejective k̑-/* (= k'-/). All of the evidence cited by Illič-Svityč from the Nostratic daughter languages points to original k^w-/ (= k^{wh}-/). Note, in particular, Proto-Kartvelian kwe and Proto-Indo-European k^ue*.

Bomhard (no. 512) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Elamite, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, Etruscan, and (?) Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic k^{wh}a-* (~ k^{wh}ə-*) post-positional intensifying and conjoining particle

202. k̑ol'ʌ* 'round': Hamito-Semitic q(w)l* 'round; to rotate' ~ Kartvelian k̑wer-/k̑wal- 'round' ~ Indo-European k^uel-* 'round; to rotate' ~ (?) Uralic kol'a* 'circle' ~ Altaic K̑ol'ʌ-* 'to mix, to revolve'. Weak.

Comments:

- Several of the forms cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here due to faulty sound correspondences or faulty reasoning: (A) There is no basis for reconstructing Proto-Kartvelian k̑wal-* — it is merely a dissimilated variant of k̑wer-* in Zan (cf. Klimov 1964:110 and 1998:93: Proto-Kartvelian [reduplicated] k̑wer-k̑wer-* 'round object' > Mingrelian k̑vaȓvalia- 'round'; Laz koȓkol-a 'curls, sheep's excrement'; cf. also Fähnrich 2007:239). (B) Moreover, the final /-r-/ in Proto-Kartvelian kwer- does not correspond to */-l-/ or */-l̥-/ (= */-ly-/) found in the other forms cited by Illič-Svityč. (C) Both the Proto-Indo-European and Proto-Altaic forms (see below) point to Proto-Nostratic initial */k^w-/ (= */k^{wh}-/) and, as a result, should be removed from this etymology.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:850) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ulo* (= k'hulo*) (with initial */k^h-/ [= */k^h-/] and medial */-l-/ instead of */-l̥-/ [= */-ly-/]) 'to roll, to turn'.

Proto-Nostratic root k^{whal}-* (~ k^{whəl}-*):

(vb.) k^{whal}-* 'to revolve, to go around, to roll';

(n.) k^{whal}-a* 'circle, circuit'

Probably identical to:

(vb.) k^{whal}-* 'to go, to walk, to move about';

(n.) k^{whal}-a* 'walking, walk, wandering, roaming'

Derivative:

(n.) k^{whal}-a* 'that which turns, rolls, revolves, or goes round and round' (> 'wheel' in the daughter languages)

Bomhard (no. 484) includes Proto-Kartvelian (reduplicated) k^wer^kw^wer-* 'round object' under the following Proto-Nostratic forms, reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Yukaghir, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root k'aw-* (~ k'əw-*):

(vb.) k'aw-* 'to bend, twist, curve, or turn round; to rotate';

(n.) k'aw-a* 'any round object'; (adj.) 'bent, curved, round'

Here is the complete Kartvelian etymology (with references):

Proto-Kartvelian k'w-er-, (reduplicated) k'wer-k'wer- 'round object': Georgian k'ver- 'flat cake, cookie (round)', k'verk'ver-a- 'round pie'; Mingrelian k'var- 'small round loaf, cookie (maize)', k'vark'valia- 'round'; Laz k'var-, nk'var- 'cookie (round, for children)', k'ork'ol-a- 'curls, sheep droppings'; Svan (Lower Bal) k'urp'i 'round', k'wāši (< k'wāl-) 'cornbread' (Mingrelian loan). Schmidt 1962:119; Klimov 1964:110 k^wer-, 110 k^wer-k^wer-* and 1998:92 k^wer-* 'flat cake, cookie (round), 93 k^wer-k^wer-* 'round object'; Fähnrich—Sardshweladse 1995:198 k^wer-; Fähnrich 2007:239 k^wer-. Note: I write the initial velar ejective as */k'-/ — this is traditionally written */k̥-/.

203. kudi* ‘tail’: Kartvelian kwad-/kud-* ‘tail’ ~ Altaic kʷudi-rga* ‘tail’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Altaic initial */k^c-/ (= */k^h-/) does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian initial */k̥-/. Here, as elsewhere, Proto-Altaic initial */k^c-/ (= */k^h-/) points to Proto-Nostratic initial */k^h-/, while Proto-Kartvelian initial */k̥-/ points to Proto-Nostratic initial */kʷ-/>.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:814) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kʷiúdo-(rgV)* (= k^hiúdo(rgV)*) ‘tail’.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) kʷad-a* ‘hind part, end, tail’

204. kula* ‘secret; to steal’: Hamito-Semitic [q(w)l* ‘to steal, to deceive’] ~ (?) Kartvelian [kwel-* ‘to hide, to cover’] ~ Dravidian kutt-* ‘secret’ ~ Altaic kʷula-/kʷola-* ‘to steal, to lie’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Dravidian medial */-tt-/ does not correspond to the medial */-l-/ found in the other languages cited by Illič-Svityč.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:696) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kʷiōla* (= kʷiōlʷa*) ‘to steal, to deceive’.
3. The alleged Proto-Kartvelian form is not listed in Klimov 1964 or 1998, nor in Fähnrich 2007, nor in Fähnrich—Sardshweladse 1995, nor in Schmidt 1962.

205. kUta* ‘small’: Hamito-Semitic q(w)t/*k(w)t/kt ‘small’ ~ Kartvelian kut-* / koṭ-* ‘small’ ~ Dravidian kudḍ-* ‘small’. Strong.

Comment: The Proto-Dravidian form is obviously mistaken. It can only have been kutt-* ‘small’ (cf. Tamil kuttam ‘smallness, young of a monkey’; etc. [cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:153, no. 1670]).

Bomhard (no. 506) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) kʷutʷ-a* ‘shortness, smallness’; (adj.) ‘short, small’

206. (?) karpa* ‘to gather fruit’: Kartvelian kērb-/kreb-* ‘to gather’, krep-* ‘to gather fruit’ ~ Indo-European Kerp-* ‘to gather fruit’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

Bomhard (no. 490) includes the Proto-Kartvelian form under the following Nostratic etymology, proposed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Elamite, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root k'er-*:

(vb.) k'er-* 'to gather, to collect; to take a handful, to pick, to pluck';

(n.) k'er-a* 'collection, gathering, handful'

207. Ka* particle inciting to action (with verbal forms): Indo-European -ke* particle inciting to action ~ Uralic -k*, -k(k)Λ* suffix of imperative and optative (originally a particle) ~ Dravidian -k(k)Λ* suffix of optative-imperative (originally a particle) ~ Altaic -kΛ* suffix of imperative. Possible.

Comment: Once again, there is no basis whatsoever for reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic initial ejective /ḳ-/* (= /k'-/). All of the evidence from the daughter languages points to Proto-Nostratic initial /k^h-/ instead, especially when the following Afrasian evidence is taken into consideration (quoted here in full from Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.50):

A second person personal pronoun stem kV-* is widespread in Afrasian (cf. Diakonoff 1988:74—75, table of Suffixed Object Pronouns, and 76—77, table of Suffixed Possessive Pronouns; Lipiński 1997:308, §36.19; Ehret 1995:194, 195, and 198: ki* 'you' [f. sg. bound pron.]; ku*, ka* 'you' [m. sg. bound pron.]; kuuna* 'you' [pl. bound pron.] [= ku* + old Afrasian pl. in -n*]). In Semitic, this stem appears as the second person singular and plural personal pronoun suffix (table taken from Moscati 1964:106, §13.14; see also Lipiński 1997:308 and 362—363; Gray 1934:64 Proto-Semitic affixed personal pronouns: 2nd sg. m. -k-ā*, 2nd sg. f. -k-ī*; O'Leary 1923:153—155; R. Stempel 1999:80—81; Bergsträsser 1983:8; Gragg—Hoberman 2012:191, table 4.23; Barth 1913:43—48):

	Akkadian	Ugaritic	Hebrew	Syriac	Arabic	Geez
m. sg.	-ka	-k	-k	-k	-ka	-ka
f. sg.	-ki	-k	-k	-k	-ki	-ki
m. pl.	-kunu	-km	-kem	-kōn	-kum(u)	-kəmmū
f. pl.	-kina	-kn	-ken	-kēn	-kunna	-kən
dual		-km			-kumā

In Akkadian, this stem is also found in the genitive/accusative and dative second person singular and plural independent pronouns: (m. sg. gen.-acc.) kāti/a, (f. sg. gen.-acc.) kāti, (m. pl. gen.-acc.) kunūti, (f. pl. gen.-acc.) [kināti]; (m. sg. dat.) kāšim, (f. sg. dat.) kāši(m), (m. pl. dative) kunūši(m), (f. pl. dat.) [kināši(m)]. In Egyptian, the second person singular masculine suffix pronoun is k ‘thou, thy, thee’, while it appears as k- [k-] and -k [-k] in Coptic. Also, the following are found in East Cushitic: Proto-East Cushitic (m.) ku*, (f.) ki* second person singular personal pronoun (object) ‘thee’ > Saho ku; Afar ko-o; Burji šee; Somali ku; Rendille ki; Boni ku; Dasenech kuu-ni ‘thou’, ko ‘thee’; Galla / Oromo si; Konso ke; Gidole he(de); Sidamo hee; Hadiyya ke(e)s; Dullay ho- ~ he-. In Southern Cushitic, the following forms occur: Proto-Southern Cushitic ki* second person singular feminine personal pronoun ‘your’ > Iraqw ki, kiŋ ‘you’ (f. sg.), -k in -ok ‘your’; Burunge igi ‘you’ (f. sg.), -g in -og ‘your’; Alagwa ki ‘you’ (f. sg.), -k in -ok ‘your’; Dahalo ki ‘your’ (cf. Ehret 1980:243). Proto-Southern Cushitic ku* second person singular masculine personal pronoun ‘your’ > Iraqw ku, kuŋ ‘you’ (m. sg.), ku- in kunga ‘you’ (pl.), -k in -ok ‘your’; Burunge ugu ‘you’ (m. sg.), -g in -og ‘your’; Alagwa ku ‘you’ (m. sg.), ku- in kungura ‘you’ (pl.), -k in -ok ‘your’; K’wadza -ku ‘your’; Asa -ku ‘your’; Dahalo -ku ‘your’ (cf. Ehret 1980:245–246). Diakonoff (1988:75) lists the following Chadic second person object pronouns (suffixes in Musgu and Logone, but not in Hausa and Mubi): (a) singular: Hausa (m.) ka, (f.) ki ‘you, your’; Musgu -ku(nu); Logone -kú, -ku, -kəm; Mubi ka, ki; (b) plural: Hausa ku ‘you, your’; Musgu -ki(ni); Logone -kùn; Mubi kan. Note also Ngizim: ka(a) ‘you’, second person singular (m. or f.) used as subject pronoun in verbal and locative sentences (cf. Schuh 1981:89); kəm ‘you’, second person feminine singular pronoun used as: (1) independent pronoun, (2) indirect object pronoun, (3) associative pronoun, and (4) independent associative pronoun (cf. Schuh 1981:87); kùn ‘you’, second person plural pronoun used as: (1) independent pronoun, (2) indirect object pronoun, (3) bound suffix pronoun, and (4) independent associative pronoun (cf. Schuh 1981:98); cì ‘you’, second person singular masculine pronoun used as: (1) independent pronoun, (2) indirect object pronoun, (3) bound suffix pronoun, and (4) independent associative pronoun (cf. Schuh 1981:31).

Notes:

1. For more information on the references cited in this quotation, cf. Bomhard, vol. 4, References.
2. Bomhard uses “Afrasian” in this quotation, and in this book. As previously noted, Illič-Svityč uses “Hamito-Semitic” (Семитохамитский) to refer to the same language family.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.50) reconstructs a Proto-Nostratic imperative marker k^hV* based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, Uralic, Yukaghir, and Altaic. He notes:

The vowel is difficult to pin down — the evidence from the daughter languages points to proto-forms k^ha*, k^hi*, and k^hu*. This leads me to suspect that we may ultimately be dealing here with the deictic stems k^ha* (~ k^hə*), k^hi* (~ k^he*), and k^hu* (~ k^ho*) (see above) used adverbially. Used in conjunction with a verb, their original function was to reinforce the imperative: GO+k^ha* = ‘go here (close by)!’, GO+k^hi* ‘go over there (not too far away)!’, GO+k^hu* ‘go yonder (far away)!’. When so used, k^ha*, k^hi*, and k^hu* were interpreted as imperative markers in Uralic, Altaic, and, in relic forms, in Indo-European. In Afrasian, however, k^ha*, k^hi*, and k^hu* were interpreted as second person markers: GO+k^ha* = ‘you go (here)!’, GO+k^hi* ‘you go (over there)!’, GO+k^hu* ‘you go (yonder)!’.

208. Kajla* ‘hot; to burn’: Hamito-Semitic [q^l-* ‘to burn, to fry’] ~ Indo-European kel-* ‘hot; cold’ ~ Dravidian kāl-* ‘to burn’ ~ Altaic k^hiala-* ‘hot; to burn, to kindle’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. There is no basis whatsoever for reconstructing a medial diphthong /-aj-/* in the Proto-Nostratic form. This reconstruction is undoubtedly due to a misinterpretation of the Altaic evidence.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:796) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k^hīāla* (~ -ī-) (= k^hīāla*) ‘hot, ashes’. Proto-Altaic initial /k^h-/* (= /k^h-/) does not come from Proto-Nostratic initial /k^h-/ (= /k^h-/). Here, as elsewhere, Proto-Altaic initial /k^h-/ (= /k^h-/) points to Proto-Nostratic initial /k^h-/.
3. This Nostratic etymology cannot stand as written.

Proto-Nostratic root k^hal-* (~ k^həl-*):

(vb.) k^hal-* ‘to burn, to warm, to cook, to roast’;

(n.) k^hal-a* ‘cooking, roasting, baking; glowing embers’

209. Kajwa* ‘to dig’: Indo-European kei^h-/keu- (< k^hieu-) ‘hole’ ~ Uralic kajwa-/kojwa-* ‘to dig, to draw (to ladle), to throw’. Strong.

Comments:

1. There is no basis whatsoever for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic initial /k^h-/*.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:117—118) reconstructs (A) Proto-Uralic kaj^hɜ* (koj^hɜ*) ‘spoon, ladle, shovel’ and (B) (1986—1988:170—171) Proto-Finno-Permian kojwa-* ‘to dig, to scoop’.

Bomhard (no. 440) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root k^hay-*:

(vb.) k^hay-* ‘to scoop out’;

(n.) k^hay-a* ‘spoon, ladle’

Extended form:

(vb.) k^hay-V-w-* ‘to dig’;

(n.) k^hay-w-a* ‘cave, pit, hollow’

210. KaLi* ‘to raise, to rise’: Hamito-Semitic ql-* ‘to rise, to raise, summit’ ~ Indo-European kelH-* ‘to rise, to raise; mountain, hill’ ~ Altaic k’ali-* ‘to rise’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:658—659) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kela* (~ k^ç, -o) ‘to rise, to jump up, to soar’. Due to the uncertainty regarding the reconstruction of the initial consonant in Proto-Altaic, it is perhaps best to omit the Proto-Altaic form from this etymology, at least until a more secure Proto-Altaic reconstruction can be established.

Proto-Nostratic root k^hilʷ-* (~ k^helʷ-*):

(vb.) k^hilʷ-* ‘to rise, to ascend, to lift up’;

(n.) k^hilʷ-a* ‘hill, height’; (adj.) ‘raised, high’

211. Kaṇa* ‘to give birth to, to be born’: Hamito-Semitic qn-* ‘to give birth to’ ~ Indo-European ken-* ‘to be born; young’ ~ Dravidian kan-* ‘to give birth to’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Proto-Indo-European form does not belong here. It should be replaced with the following Indo-European evidence (cf. Bomhard, no. 459):

Proto-Indo-European k’en-/*k’on-/k’ē- ‘to beget, to produce, to create, to bring forth’: Sanskrit jánati ‘to beget, to produce, to create; to assign, to procure’, jánas- ‘race’; Avestan zan- ‘to beget, to bear; to be born’, zana- ‘people’; Greek γίγνομαι ‘to be born’, γεννάω ‘to beget, to bring forth, to bear', γένος 'race, stock, kin', γέννα 'descent, birth'; Armenian cnanim 'to beget', cin 'birth'; Latin genō, gignō 'to beget, to bear, to bring forth', genus 'class, kind; birth, descent, origin', gēns, -tis 'clan; offspring, descendant; people, tribe, nation'; Old Irish gainethar 'to be born', gein 'birth'; Welsh geni 'to give birth'; Gothic kuni 'race, generation'; Old Icelandic kyn 'kin, kindred; kind, sort, species; gender', kind 'race, kind'; Old English cynn 'kind, species, variety; race, progeny; sex, (grammatical) gender', ge-cynd, cynd 'kind, species; nature, quality, manner; gender; origin, generation; offspring; genitals', cennan 'to bear (child), to produce'; Old Frisian kinn, kenn 'race, generation; class, kind'; Old Saxon kunni 'race, generation; class, kind'; Dutch kunne 'race, generation'; Old High German chunni 'race, generation', kind 'child; (pl.) children, offspring' (New High German Kind).

Proto-Nostratic root k'an-* (~ k'an-*):

(vb.) k'an-* 'to get, to acquire, to create, to produce, to beget';

(n.) k'an-a* 'birth, offspring, child, young, produce'; (adj.) 'born, begotten, produced'

212. Kap'a* 'to cover': Hamito-Semitic kp-/qp-* 'to cover, to close' ~ Dravidian kapp-/kavA-* 'to cover' ~ Altaic k'apa-* 'to close'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. The Afrasian material points to two separate stems. The Altaic material admits to two possible interpretations.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak reconstruct: (A) (2003:646) Proto-Altaic k[ā]p'á* (= k[ā]p'há*) 'to cover; sack' (> Proto-Tungusic kup-* 'to cover; cloth, sheath, boxing, sack, knee covering, hat, cover, wadded coat'; Proto-Mongolian kabt-* 'bag, sack'; Proto-Turkic Kāp-* 'to surround; sack'); and (B) (2003:765—766) Proto-Altaic k'āp'ù* (= k'hāp'hù*) 'barrier' (> Proto-Tungusic xapki-* 'to block; partition'; Proto-Mongolian kaya-* 'to hinder, to close'; Proto-Turkic Kap-* 'cover; gate, door; to close').

Proto-Nostratic root k'aph-* (~ k'əp'h-*):

(vb.) k'aph-* 'to cover; to shut, to close';

(n.) k'aph-a* 'covering'

213. Ḳar/ä/* ‘black, dark colored’: Indo-European ker-, ker-s- ‘black, dark’ ~ Dravidian kar/kār/kār* ‘black, dark’ ~ Altaic Karä* ‘black’. Strong.

Comment: Faulty Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. There is no evidence from any of the Nostratic daughter languages to justify positing an initial velar ejective */ḳ-/ (= */k’-/) in Proto-Nostratic. However, even though the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is wrong, the etymology, as a whole, is solid.

Bomhard (no. 429) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian (Egyptian and Omotic), Dravidian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ḵar-a* ‘blackness, darkness’; (adj.) ‘black, dark’

214. Ḳarb/i/* ‘abdomen, viscera’: Hamito-Semitic qrb* ‘viscera, abdomen’ ~ Indo-European (Kerp-/Krep-) ‘abdomen, body’ ~ Dravidian karā* ‘fetus, womb’ ~ Altaic k’arbi-* ‘abdomen, belly fat’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Indo-European medial /-p-*/ does not correspond with either Proto-Afrasian or Proto-Altaic medial /-b-*/, and, needless to repeat, Proto-Indo-European initial */K-/ (better */k-/) does not correspond to Proto-Afrasian initial */q-/ (= */k’-/).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:800—801) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k’ǰárme* (= ḵǰáryme*) ‘fat’ as the source of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. Assuming that this is a valid reconstruction, it means that the Altaic material must be removed from this entry.

Bomhard (no. 543) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k’war-b-a* ‘the inside, the middle, interior, inward part’

As for the Proto-Indo-European form posited by Illič-Svityč, Bomhard (no. 530) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European k^whrep^{h-}/k^whyph^{h-}* ‘body, belly’ and derives it from the following Proto-Nostratic form, reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) (?) k^whur-a* ‘body, belly’

The following evidence (and references) provides the basis for the reconstruction of Proto-Indo-European k^whrep^{h-}/k^whyph^{h-}* ‘body, belly’:

Sanskrit (instr. sg.) kṛpā 'shape, beautiful appearance'; Avestan kəhrp- 'body, corpse'; Latin corpus 'body'; Old Irish crí 'body, shape, frame'; Old English hrif 'womb, stomach', also -(h)rif in mid(h)rif 'diaphragm, entrails'; Old Frisian href, hrif 'stomach', also -ref in midref 'diaphragm'; Old High German href 'belly, womb, abdomen'. Pokorny 1959:620 krep-, kṛp- (or k^uerp-* ?) 'body, abdomen, belly, shape'; Walde 1927—1932.I:486—487 qrep-, qṛp- (or q^uerp-* ?); Watkins 1985:34 k^wrep-* and 2000:46 k^wrep-* 'body, form, appearance'; Mallory—Adams 1997:76 kréps* 'body'; Mayrhofer 1956—1980.I:260; Ernout—Meillet 1985:144 kṛp-; de Vaan 2008:137—138 kṛp-, kṛp-os-*; Walde—Hofmann 1965—1972.I:277—278.

215. Kara* 'to burn, to fire': Hamito-Semitic qr(r)* 'to burn, to fire' ~ Indo-European ker-* 'to burn, to fry; fire' ~ Dravidian kar(ʌ)-* 'to fire, to be scorched, to burn'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. I have rated Illič-Svityč's etymology as "weak" rather than completely rejecting it. The reason for this is that the comparison of the Afrasian and Dravidian material may still be valid. However, this is difficult to judge based upon the rather meager evidence presented from the Afrasian daughter languages (single forms from Akkadian, Egyptian, and Tuareg), which does not provide enough information to be able to determine the vowel to be reconstructed for Proto-Afrasian.

Proto-Nostratic root t^hher-*:

(vb.) t^hher-* 'to burn, to roast';

(n.) t^hher-a* 'ash(es), charcoal, burnt wood; firewood'; (adj.) 'burned, heated, roasted, charred, parched'

Note: The Indo-European evidence in Illič-Svityč's entry is included by Bomhard in an alternative etymology. Bomhard lists the following forms from the Indo-European daughter languages:

Proto-Indo-European k^her-/k^hy-* (secondary o-grade form: k^hor-*) 'to burn, to roast': Latin carbō 'burning or burnt wood', cremō 'to burn, to consume by fire'; Welsh crasu 'to bake'; Gothic hauri* 'coal'; Old Icelandic hyrr 'fire'; Swedish (dial.) hyr 'glowing ashes'; Old English heorð 'hearth', hierstan 'to fry, to roast, to scorch'; Old Frisian herth, hirth, hird 'hearth'; Old Saxon herth

‘hearth’; Dutch haard ‘hearth’; Old High German herd ‘hearth’ (New High German Herd), herstan ‘to roast’; Lithuanian kárštas ‘hot’.

216. Ʒara* ‘cliff, steep elevation’: Afrasian qr* ‘cliff, mountain, hill’ ~ Indo-European ker-* ‘cliff, stone’ ~ Dravidian kar(a)-* ‘bank, edge’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Proto-Afrasian form must be removed.

Bomhard (no. 425) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^har-a* ‘edge, side, bank’:

Perhaps a derivative of:

(vb.) k^har-* ‘to twist, turn, spin, or wind around’;

(n.) k^har-a* ‘ring, circle, curve’; (adj.) ‘round, curved, twisted’

217. Ʒar’(ä)* ‘bark, crust, rind’: Hamito-Semitic qr(m)* ‘bark, rind, crust’ ~ Indo-European ker-* ‘bark, skin’ ~ Uralic köre/kere ‘bark, crust’ ~ Altaic k^hE/’ä//Ʒar’ ‘bark, crust’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Proto-Afrasian form must be removed.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:782—783) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k^hé’ä* (= k^hérvä*) ‘bark’. Proto-Altaic initial */k^h-/ (= *k^h-/) (together with Proto-Indo-European initial */k-/ points to Proto-Nostratic initial */k^h-/ and not to the Proto-Nostratic initial velar ejective */Ʒ-/ (= */k’-/ reconstructed by Illič-Svityč.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^har-a* ‘skin, hide; bark, rind’:

Derivative of:

(vb.) k^har-* ‘to cut, to cut into, to cut off’;

(n.) k^har-a* ‘cut, incision’

218. Ʒaśa* ‘to scrape, to scratch’: Hamito-Semitic [qś-* ‘to scrape, to fleece’] ~ Indo-European kes-* ‘to scratch’ ~ Dravidian kažž-* ‘rash, itch’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
 2. The Proto-Dravidian reconstruction proposed by Illič-Svityč is impossible. Proto-Dravidian did not have the sound /ǰ/, though, in fairness, Illič-Svityč (1981—1984.I:343, no. 218) does provide an explanation. I cannot give a reference here, since, to my knowledge, no Dravidian linguist, from Caldwell to Krishnamurti to Andronov to Subrahmanyam to Steever to Burrow to Emeneau, and so on and so forth, has ever seriously considered such a proposal. The only possible Proto-Dravidian reconstruction would be kacc- ‘itch, scab’ (for reflexes in the Dravidian daughter languages, cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:103, no. 1104), if this even goes back to Proto-Dravidian. Such a reconstruction is supported by the following lexical parallels in Indo-Aryan: Sanskrit kacchú-ḥ ‘itch, scab, cutaneous disease’; Pāli kacchu- ‘the plant Carpopogon pruriens, the fruit of which causes itch when applied to the skin; itch, scab, cutaneous disease’, usually used in the phrase kacchuyā khajjati ‘to be eaten by itch’; etc. For more information, cf. Turner 1966—1969.I:130, no. 2621; Mayrhofer 1956—1980.I:139. Some scholars have speculated that the “lexical parallels” between Dravidian and Indo-Aryan are loanwords from Dravidian into Indo-Aryan, while other scholars have assumed the reverse. Perhaps, even, these are loanwords into each from another source altogether. In any case, the Dravidian form must be removed from this etymology.
 3. Illič-Svityč only provides Semitic material from Afrasian. The /š/ in the Proto-Afrasian (actually, Proto-Semitic) reconstruction he gives (qš- ‘to scrape, to fleecce’) represents either a lateralized affricate or a fricative-lateral (cf. Steiner 1977), which does not correspond to either Proto-Indo-European */s/ or (the alleged) Proto-Dravidian */ǰ/.
219. ḲaSa* ‘bone’: Hamito-Semitic qš* ‘bone’ ~ Indo-European Ḳos-t-* ‘bone, rib’. Possible.

Comments:

1. This is a possible etymology, but only if we assume that Proto-Indo-European initial */K-/ is from earlier */k’-/. However, though by no means impossible, this suggestion seems rather ad hoc. Furthermore, the suggestion that Proto-Indo-European initial */K-/ might be from an earlier laryngeal (cf. Derksen 2008:239) also seems rather ad hoc. Thus, the source of Indo-European initial */K-/ remains unresolved.
2. The putative Mordvin cognates cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here — they go back to Proto-Finno-Permian kask3* ‘sacral region, lumbar region, small of the back’ (cf. Rédei 1986—1988:648).
3. The evidence from the Indo-European daughter languages comes mainly, if not exclusively, from Slavic:

Old Church Slavic kostъ ‘bone’; Russian kost’ [костъ] ‘bone’; Polish kość ‘bone’; Czech kost ‘bone’; Bulgarian kost ‘bone’; Serbo-Croatian kôst ‘rib’; Macedonian koska ‘bone’.

Though some scholars have also suggested that Latin costa ‘rib’ is a cognate of the Slavic forms (cf. Derksen 2008:239), this is rejected by Ernout—Meillet (1985:146) and de Vaan (2008:140), who notes:

Costa has been compared with Slavic kost-i-* ‘bone’, yet it is unlikely that it is cognate. In Slavic, kostъ may be the reflex of PIE Host-* ‘bone’, since there is no other word which qualifies for this. This would then be a unique case of kV- < HV* in Slavic. Yet in Latin, PIE Host-* is reflected by os, ossis, so that costa cannot reflect the same etymon. Since it also does not mean ‘bone’ but ‘rib’, which may have different semantic roots, we must regard costa as an isolated word without etymology.

Bomhard (no. 494) tentatively accepts Illič-Svityč’s etymology and reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, and (?) Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k’os-a* ‘bone’

Notes:

1. Bomhard includes Latin costa ‘rib’ as part of the Indo-European supporting material he cites, as does Illič-Svityč.
2. Here is the Dravidian evidence added by Bomhard:

Proto-Dravidian kōcc-* ‘bone’: Kuṛux xōcol ‘bone’; Malto qoclu ‘bone’. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:197, no. 1288.

220. Kawinga* ‘armpit, underarm’: Uralic kajŋa-la* ‘armpit, underarm’ ~ Dravidian kavuŋka* ‘armpit, underarm’ ~ Altaic k’awiŋi* ‘armpit, underarm’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Here yet again, there is no justification for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic initial /K-/* (= /k’-/*).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:830) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k’òbàni* (= kʰòbàni*) ‘arm-pit’. Proto-Altaic initial /k’-/* (= /kʰ-/) points to Proto-Nostratic initial /kʰ-/.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:178) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian konz* (kana*), (?) konz* (kana*) + ala ‘armpit, underarm’. Sammallahti (1988:543) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian koni* ‘armpit’.

4. When more modern Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic reconstructions are taken into consideration, there is little to support this etymology.

221. Ḳä/H/ä* 'tongue': Uralic kēle* 'tongue' ~ Altaic k'āla-* 'tongue; to talk'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Here, for the umpteenth time, there is no justification for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic initial */Ḳ-/ (= */k'-/).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:796—797) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ǰāli* (= k'hǰāli*) 'tongue'.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:144—145) reconstructs Proto-Uralic kele* (kēle*) 'tongue, language'.

Bomhard (no. 441) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Uralic, Altaic, and (?) Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic root k^hil-* (~ k^hel-*):

(vb.) k^hil-* 'to make a sound or a noise; to say, to speak, to talk';

(n.) k^hil-a* 'sound, noise; tongue, speech, language'

222. Ḳäp'ä* 'paw': Hamito-Semitic qp/*kp/qb 'foot, sole, hoof; palm' ~ Indo-European ḱepH-* 'hoof, paw' ~ Uralic käppä* 'paw'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The plethora of Proto-Afrasian variants listed by Illič-Svityč cannot possibly all belong to the same etymology.
2. Bomhard (no. 419) includes both Proto-Afrasian kp* 'palm, hand' (note, for example, Šḥeri / Jibbāli kef 'paw, claw, palm of the hand'; Ḥarsūsi kef 'flat of the hand, claw, paw'; Mehri kaf 'palm of the hand, paw, claw') and Proto-Uralic käppä* 'paw' under the following etymology (see above, entry no. 190):

Proto-Nostratic root k^hap^h-*:

(vb.) k^hap^h-* 'to take, seize, or grasp with the hand; to press or squeeze with the hand';

(n.) k^hap^h-a* 'hand'

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^hab-a* 'foot, hoof'

Note: Bomhard explains the development of the Proto-Indo-European cognate as follows: Proto-Indo-European k^hab-* > (with progressive voicing assimilation and with the addition of a laryngeal suffix, as suggested by Mallory—Adams 1997:272 and Watkins 2000:43) k^hāp^h-Ho-* ‘hoof’.

223. Kē* ‘who’: Uralic ke-* ‘who’ (stem of oblique case ?) ~ Altaic k^he-* ‘who’. Strong.

Comment: Even though this is rated as a strong etymology, the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction proposed by Illič-Svityč is erroneous.

Bomhard (no. 528) treats this entry and entry no. 232 (see below) together and reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic relative pronoun stem k^{wh}i-* (~ k^{wh}e-); interrogative pronoun stem k^{wh}a- (~ k^{wh}ə-*)

224. KĚĉa* ‘summer heat’: Hamito-Semitic q(j)t̥* ‘summer heat’ ~ Uralic kĚĉa* ‘summer heat, summer’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Proto-Afrasian t̥/* (= t^hy/* [Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 7, §7.6, following proposals by André Martinet, David Cohen, Jean Cantineau, and others] or c^h/* [Ehret 1995:251—254] or still other interpretations) does not correspond to Proto-Uralic č/. It corresponds to Proto-Uralic ć/ (= ty/* [Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 12, §12.6, table of sound correspondences]) instead.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:114) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kačz* ‘warmth; to become warm’.

225. Keta* ‘to fall’: Indo-European (?) Keid-/kād-* ‘to fall’ ~ Dravidian keṭa-* ‘to fall, to collapse’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Mistaken Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Proto-Indo-European initial K-/* ~ k̥-/* point to Proto-Nostratic k^h-/, not to K̥-/ (= k^h’-/*).
3. Proto-Indo-European -d-/* (= -t^h-/* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) points to Proto-Nostratic -t^h-/, not to -t-/ (= -t^h-/*).

226. KĚñU* ‘empty, light (weight)’: Indo-European ken-* ‘empty’ ~ Uralic [kĚña-* ‘light’] ~ Altaic k^hñü* ‘light’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:862) reconstructs Proto-Ugric kšn3* 'light'.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:776—777) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ěńó* (= k^hěń'ó*) 'light, thin'.
3. Proto-Indo-European ken-* 'empty' does not match the Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic forms semantically. It should be removed.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book). Nevertheless, the comparison of the Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic forms allows us to reconstruct Proto-Eurasiatic k^hen^v-a* 'light (of weight)' (no initial ejective!).

227. KerA* 'horn': Hamito-Semitic qr-* 'horn' ~ Indo-European ker-* 'horn; head, top, summit'. Rejected.

Comment: This proposal has been around for a very long time — Illič-Svityč was by no means the first to suggest it. However, it is false — a mere chance resemblance. Proto-Afrasian initial /q-/* (= /k'-/) does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European initial /k-/, which points to Proto-Nostratic /k^h-/*.

In order to account for the Proto-Indo-European form cited by Illič-Svityč (ker-* 'horn; head, top, summit'), Bomhard (no. 443) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, Afrasian, Altaic (Mongolian and Turkic), and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^hir-a* 'uppermost part (of anything): horn, head, skull, crown of head; tip, top, summit, peak'

In order to account for the Proto-Afrasian form cited by Illič-Svityč (qr-* 'horn'), Bomhard (no. 591) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, and (?) Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) q^war-a* 'edge, point, tip, peak'

The Indo-European evidence adduced by Bomhard to support this etymology is as follows:

Proto-Indo-European k^wer-/*k^wor-/k^wr- 'hill, mountain, peak': Greek δερᾶς (Cretan δηράς) (probably < δερF-αδ-*) 'the ridge of a chain of hills'; Sanskrit giri-ḥ 'mountain, hill, rock'; Avestan gairi- 'mountain'; Lithuanian girė, girià 'forest'; Old Church Slavic gora 'mountain'; Russian gorá [ropá] 'mountain'; Serbo-Croatian gòra 'mountain'; Albanian gur 'rock'; Hittite (acc. sg.) gur-ta-an 'citadel', Kuriwanda the name of a mountain in south-western Anatolia.

The Afrasian evidence adduced by Bomhard to support this etymology is as follows:

Proto-Afrasian q'war-* ‘highest point, top, peak, summit, hill, mountain, horn’: Proto-Semitic k'arn-* ‘horn, summit, peak’ > Akkadian ḫarnu ‘horn’; Ugaritic ḫrn ‘horn’; Hebrew ḫeren [ḫ.ḫ.ḫ] ‘horn; corner, point, peak’; Phoenician ḫrn ‘horn’; Aramaic ḫarnā ‘horn’; Palmyrene ḫrn ‘horn, corner’; Arabic ḫarn ‘horn, top, summit, peak (of a mountain)’, ḫurna ‘salient angle, nook, corner’; Ḥarsūsi ḫōn/ḫerōn ‘horn, hill, top’, ḫernēt ‘corner’; Mehri ḫōn/ḫərūn ‘horn, peak, spur; tall narrow-based hill; hilt of a dagger; pod (of beans)’, ḫərnēt ‘corner’; Šheri / Jibbāli ḫun/ḫérūn ‘horn, hilt of a dagger, pod, peak’; Geez / Ethiopic ḫarn [ḫ.ḫ.ḫ] ‘horn, trumpet, tip, point’; Tigre ḫār, ḫärn ‘horn’; Tigrinya ḫärni ‘horn’; Harari ḫär ‘horn’; Gurage ḫär ‘horn’; Amharic ḫänd (< k'arn-*) ‘horn’; Argobba ḫänd ‘horn’. Geez / Ethiopic ḫardu [ḫ.ḫ.ḫ] ‘hill’. Egyptian q33 ‘hill, high ground, high place’, q3q3 ‘hill, high place’, q3y-t ‘high ground, arable land’, q3-t ‘high land, height’, q3y-t ‘high ground, arable land’, q3, q3y ‘to be high, exalted’, q3i ‘tall, high, exalted’, q3w ‘height’; Coptic (Sahidic), koie [koie], koeie [koieie], (Bohairic) koi [koi] (< qy* < q3y*) ‘field’, kro [kpo] (Demotic qr ‘shore’, qrr3 ‘embankment’) ‘shore (of sea, river), limit or margin (of land), hill, dale’. Proto-East Cushitic k'ar-* ‘point, peak, top’ > Galla / Oromo k'arree ‘peak’; Somali qar ‘hill higher than kur’; Gedeo / Darasa k'ar- ‘to sharpen’, k'ara ‘sharp (of knife)’, (reduplicated) k'ark'arā ‘edge, blade’; Burji c'ar-i ‘point, top, peak, pointedness’ (loan, probably from Oromo); Hadiyya k'ar-ess- ‘to whet’, k'are?alla ‘edge, blade’, k'ar-ees-aanco ‘whetstone, rasp, file’; Sidamo k'ara ‘point, edge, blade’. Omotic: Gonga k'ar-* ‘horn’ (Mocha qáro ‘horn’); Aari k'ari ‘tusk’, k'armi ‘sharp’.

228. Ḫila* ‘stem, stalk, hair’: Indo-European kel-* ‘(prickly) stem, stalk’ ~ Uralic kalke* ‘hair, combings, flocks’ ~ Dravidian [kel* ‘feather, hair’] ~ Altaic k'ila* ‘thick hair’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. The vowels do not match in the forms cited from the Nostratic daughter languages.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:789—790) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k'ilo* (= kh'ilo*) ‘stalk, stem’. Except for the Korean form cited by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak, the data from the Altaic daughter languages do not support positing a meaning ‘thick hair’ for Proto-Altaic.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:644) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Volgaic kalke* ‘hair; stalk’.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) kʰalʷ-a* ‘reed, stalk, stem, blade of grass, haulm’

The Altaic evidence adduced by Bomhard to support this etymology is as follows:

Proto-Altaic kʰälʷo* ‘reed, a kind of grass’: Proto-Mongolian kal-* ‘reed, feather-grass’ > Written Mongolian qaltalži ‘reed, feather-grass’; Khalkha χaltalž ‘reed, feather-grass’; Buriat χalaxan ‘reed, feather-grass’. Proto-Turkic KAlʷak* ‘bulrush, reedmace’ > Karakhanide Turkic qašaq ‘bulrush, reedmace’; Kirghiz qašaq ‘bulrush, reedmace’, qašeq ‘aftergrass’. Cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003:758 kʰälʷo* ‘reed, a kind of grass’.

229. Kin/u/* ‘to be angry, to be jealous’: Hamito-Semitic qn-* ‘to be jealous, to be angry’ ~ Dravidian kina* ‘to be angry’ ~ Altaic Kin/u/-* ‘to be angry, to be jealous’. Weak.

Comments:

1. I could not locate the Altaic evidence cited by Illič-Svityč in Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003, though I did locate most of the individual forms in dictionaries for the individual languages.
2. Not in Bomhard (this book).
3. The Afrasian evidence cited by Illič-Svityč points to Proto-Nostratic initial /K-/* (= /kʰ-/*).
4. Proto-Semitic kan-aʔ-* ‘to be jealous, to be envious’ is well-represented in the Semitic daughter languages. However, there does not appear to be any justification for assigning the meaning ‘to be angry’ as well.
5. The Dravidian evidence points to Proto-Dravidian kin-* ‘to be angry, enraged, furious, irritated, etc.’ (cf. Krishnamurti 2003:129; Burrow—Emeneau 1984: 147, no, 1600). There is no trace of the meaning ‘to be jealous’ parallel to what is found in the Afrasian and Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.
6. Though I would like to be able to give Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt here, there are simply too many uncertainties concerning this etymology.

230. Kira* ‘hoarfrost’: Hamito-Semitic qr-* ‘ice, hoarfrost, cold’ ~ Indo-European ker-* (in derivatives) ‘hoarfrost, crust (of ice on snow)’ ~ Uralic kirte*, kira* ‘crust (of ice on snow)’ ~ Altaic kʰir(a)-* ‘hoarfrost, new snow’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian initial /q-/* (= /kʰ-/) does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European initial /k̑-/ (= /kʰ-/) or to Proto-Altaic initial /kʰ-/ (= /kʰ-/*). Consequently, the Afrasian material should be removed.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:793) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kʰirma* (~ -u, -o) (= kʰirma*) ‘snow, hoar-frost’.

3. The Proto-Indo-European form is reconstructed as kreus-* ‘to begin to freeze, to form a crust’ by Watkins (2000:44) (see also Beekes 2020.I:786: Proto-Indo-European kreus-* ‘to shiver’ > Greek κρύος ‘icy cold, frost’; etc.).
4. Rédei (1986—1988:150) reconstructs Proto-Uralic kerte* (kirte*) ‘thin snow, crust (of ice)’.

Bomhard (no. 444) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic root k^hir-* (~ k^her-*):

(vb.) k^hir-* ‘to freeze, to be cold’;

(n.) k^hir-a* ‘frost, cold’

231. (Descriptive) K^hir^h* ‘to scrape’: Hamito-Semitic qr-* ‘to scrape, to wound’ ~ Proto-Indo-European k^herH-* ‘to destroy, to break’ ~ Dravidian kir^h/ker^h ‘to scrape, to shave’ ~ Altaic k^hir(a)-* ‘to scrape, to plane, to cut’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:679—680) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k^hiro* ‘to cut, to mince’.

As an alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 491) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root k^hir-* (~ k^her-) or k^hur- (~ k^hor-*):

(vb.) k^hir-* or k^hur-* ‘to cut, to cut into, to incise, to engrave, to notch; to cut off, to sever, to nip off, to clip; to cut in two, to split’;

(n.) k^hir-a* or k^hur-a* ‘cut, slit, notch; chip, piece cut off’

Bomhard includes the following Indo-European evidence in this etymology:

Proto-Indo-European k^her-/*k^hor-/k^hir- (extended form: k^herbh-/*k^horbh-/k^hirbh-) ‘to cut, to carve, to notch’: Greek γράφω ‘to write’; Old Icelandic krota ‘to engrave’, kurfir ‘chip, cut-off piece’; Old English ceorfan ‘to cut’, cyrf ‘cutting’; Old Frisian kerva ‘to cut’; Dutch kerven ‘to cut’; Middle High German kerban ‘to cut, to notch’ (New High German kerben).

232. K^ho* ‘who’: Hamito-Semitic k(w)/q(w) ‘who’ (stem of interrogative pronoun) ~ Indo-European k^ho-* ‘who’ (k^hi-* ‘what’ and other interrogative pronouns)

~ Uralic ko-/ku-* 'who' ~ Altaic k'a-/k'o-* stem of interrogative pronoun. Strong.

Comment: Even though this is a solid etymology, the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is erroneous — there is no justification for reconstructing an initial ejective /k̚-/*.

Bomhard (no. 528) treats this entry and entry no. 223 (see above) together and reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic relative pronoun stem k^{wh}i-* (~ k^{wh}e-); interrogative pronoun stem k^{wh}a- (~ k^{wh}ə-*)

233. k̚oja* 'to rest': Hamito-Semitic qwj* 'to remain, to rest' ~ Indo-European k^{uei}(h̄)-* 'to rest' ~ Uralic koja-* 'to lie, to rest' ~ Dravidian kē-* 'to rest, to lie'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian initial /q-/* (= /k'-/) does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European initial /k^u-/ (= /k^{wh}-/*). Consequently, the Afrasian material should be removed.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:197) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kujz-* 'to lie'.
3. The Indo-European material should also be removed.

Proto-Nostratic root k^hay-* (~ k^həy-*):

(vb.) k^hay-* 'to put, to place, to set, to lay; to be placed, to lie';

(n.) k^hay-a* 'resting place, abode, dwelling; cot, bed'

234. k̚ora* 'to gnaw; worm': Indo-European k^uymi-* 'worm', (?) k^uer-* 'to chew up, to break up' ~ Altaic kora* 'worm'. Strong.

Comments:

1. This is another case where the evidence from the Nostratic daughter languages is solid, but the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction proposed by Illič-Svityč is erroneous. There is nothing from either Proto-Indo-European or Proto-Altaic to justify positing an initial ejective /k̚-/* in Proto-Nostratic.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:807—808) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k̚jōro* (= k^hjōro*) 'worm, gad-fly'.

Bomhard (no. 531) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) k^{wh}ur-a* ‘worm, grub, maggot, insect’

235. Kul^Λ* ‘to fall, to subside’: Uralic kul^Λ-* ‘to fall out, to fall, to wear out’ ~ Altaic k^uul^Λ-* ‘to fall, to collapse’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
 2. Rédei (1986—1988:200) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian kul³-* ‘to detach, to come loose; to be separated from; to go out; to fall out, to fall away’ (‘sich ablösen; ausgehen; aus-, abfallen’).
 3. Lax semantics. The underlying meaning of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč is ‘to fall down, to collapse’, while that of the Uralic forms is ‘to be separated from; to detach, to come apart’.
236. Kur^Λ* ‘to plait, to tie, to bind’: Indo-European k^uer-* ‘to build, to make’ ~ Uralic kur^Λ-/kor^Λ- ‘to plait, to tack together, to fasten’ ~ Dravidian kur^Λ-* ‘to plait, to tie, to spin’ ~ Altaic Kur^Λ-* ‘to adjust (to), to build, to arrange’. Weak.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:745—746) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kuri* ‘wattle, fence, enclosure, building’.
3. Proto-Altaic initial /k-/* (< Proto-Nostratic /k’-/) does not match Proto-Indo-European initial /k^u-/ (= /k^{wh}-/) (< Proto-Nostratic /k^{wh}-/). Thus, either one or the other of them has to be removed from this etymology.

Proto-Nostratic root k^{wh}ir-* (~ k^{wh}er-*):

(vb.) k^{wh}ir-* ‘to twist or twine together, to tie together, to bind, to fasten’;

(n.) k^{wh}ir-a* ‘twist, tie, bundle, rope; the act of twisting or twining together: work, craft, act, action’

The Indo-European evidence adduced by Bomhard to support this etymology is as follows:

Proto-Indo-European k^{wh}er-/k^{wh}r-* (secondary o-grade form: k^{wh}or-*) ‘to do, to make, to build’: Sanskrit karóti, kṛṇóti ‘to do, to make, to perform, to cause, to accomplish, to effect, to prepare, to undertake; to execute, to carry out; to manufacture, to work at, to elaborate, to build; to form or construct one thing out of another; to employ, to use, to make use of', krtá-ḥ 'done, made, accomplished, performed, prepared, made ready; obtained, gained, acquired, placed at hand', kará-ḥ 'doing, making', kárman- 'act, action, performance, business', kṛtyā 'act, action, deed, performance, achievement; enchantment, magic'; Avestan kərənaoiti 'to do, to make'; Old Persian kar- 'to do, to make, to build'; Lithuanian kuriù, kùrti 'to make, to create, to build'.

The Afrasian evidence adduced by Bomhard to support this etymology is as follows (the vowel reconstructed for Proto-Afrasian is based upon the Southern Cushitic evidence):

Proto-Afrasian k^wir-* 'to twist or twine together, to tie together, to bind, to fasten': Proto-Semitic kar-as-* 'to tie, to fasten' > Akkadian karāsu 'to tie, to fasten', kurussu (kursū) 'strap (of leather or metal)'. Proto-Semitic kar-ab-* 'to twist or twine together' > Arabic karaba 'to tighten one's bonds, to twist a rope'; Ḥarsūsi kerōb 'to screw, to screw up'; Mehri kərūb 'to screw, to screw a rifle butt tight through the muzzle'; Šḥeri / Jibbāli kórōb 'to screw, to screw a rifle butt tight (through the muzzle)'; Geez / Ethiopic karabo [ክረቦ] 'woven basket, pouch'; Tigrinya karibbo 'small skin used as a bag'; Amharic kārābo 'basket'. Leslau 1987:290. Proto-Semitic kar-ak-* 'to twist or twine together, to tie together, to bind, to fasten' > Hebrew kāraḥ [כָּרַח] 'to encircle, to twine around, to embrace, to wrap', kereḥ [כֶּרֶחַ] 'twining; scroll, volume; bundle'; Aramaic kəraḥ 'to enwrap, to surround', kəriḫā 'bundle; scroll'; Akkadian karāku 'to intertwine; to obstruct, to dam; to immerse, to soak; to do promptly (?)'; Geez / Ethiopic k^wark^wada [ክ-ርክ-ደ] 'to embrace, to take in one's arms'; Amharic k^wärkk^wädä 'to tie up, to shackle'. Klein 1987:287; Leslau 1987:291; Murtonen 1989:239. Egyptian k3-t 'work, construction; craft, profession', k3wty 'workman, laborer, artisan, craftsman, *weaver'. Hannig 1995:874—875 and 875; Gardiner 1957:597; Faulkner 1962:283; Erman—Grapow 1921:193 and 1926—1963.5:98—101, 5:102. Berber: Tuareg kurət 'to wind or wrap several times (as a turban around the head)', takārut 'turban'; Ghadames akraru 'stick used to stir sauces'; Wargla sskur 'to wind into a ball, to wrap', akur 'large ball, ball of wool', takurt 'ball'; Mزاب sseçur 'to wind into a ball', açur 'ball', taçrart 'skein'; Tamazight kur 'to be wrapped, to be wound into a ball', tikurin 'ball, spool of thread'; Riff skur 'to wind into a ball', takurt 'ball (of thread, wool)'; Kabyle k^wər 'to be wound into a ball', akur 'large ball'; Zenaga kurer 'to be round, circular; to walk in a circle'. Proto-Southern Cushitic k^wirih-, k^wirih- 'to turn (intr.)' > Ma'a -kiri?i 'to come back', -kiriti 'to turn (something); to give back; to ask'; Iraqw kwirihis- 'to twist (something)'. Ehret 1980:266. Ehret 1995:207, no. 346, k^wir-* 'to turn'.

Note: The Dravidian material (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:161, no. 1779) cited by Illič-Svityč may belong here.

237. (?) Ḳur*_A ‘blood’: Indo-European kreuH-* ‘coagulated blood, bloody meat’ ~ Dravidian kuruti* ‘blood’. Strong.

Comment: Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

Bomhard (no. 453) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian (Ancient Egyptian), Dravidian, and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ḵur-a* ‘blood’

238. ḲüjnA* ‘wolf, dog’: (?) Afrasian k(j)n/k(j)l, k(w)l* ‘dog, wolf’ ~ Indo-European ḵuḍn/kun- ‘dog’; Uralic küjnä* ‘wolf’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč pointing to Proto-Afrasian k(j)l*, k(w)l* should be removed.
3. Though not in Rédei (1986—1988), I was able to verify the Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč (cf. Napolskikh [Напольских] (2001:370—371).

Bomhard (no. 454) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ḵuwan-a* or ḵun-a* originally a generic term meaning ‘young (especially of animals)’; later specialized as ‘young dog, puppy’ (as in Kannaḍa and Kolami within Dravidian) and then simply ‘dog’.

Note: This term may be an early borrowing.

239. Ḳülä* ‘community, clan’: Hamito-Semitic [q(w)l* ‘tribe’] ~ Indo-European ḵuel-* ‘clan, family’ ~ Uralic külä* ‘agricultural community, village; dwelling, house’ ~ (?) Dravidian [kūl* ‘family, crowd’] ~ Altaic [Ḳülä* ‘house, house servants’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:735) reconstruct Proto-Altaic kūlV* ‘servant, slave’. Semantically, this really has nothing to do with any of the forms from the other Nostratic daughter languages and, therefore, should be removed.
2. I have had difficulty verifying the Semitic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. Even the reference he gives to Cohen seems problematic — Illič-Svityč refers to Cohen (1947:124, no. 223). There, Cohen lists Hebrew kahal ‘assemblée’ / ‘assembly gathering’ (this should be kāhāl) and refers to Arabic ḵulla ‘foule’ / ‘crowd, multitude’, referring further to item no. 233. But the meaning he gives for the Arabic form under no. 223 is not the same as the meaning he gives under no. 233. Instead, under no. 233, he lists Arabic ḵulla ‘cime, sommet de la tête, tête’ and ‘cruche’ / ‘highest point; top, summit, head; apex; vertex’ and ‘pitcher, jug’, not ‘foule’ / ‘crowd, multitude’. As for Hebrew kāhāl ‘assembly, gathering’, the only Semitic cognates Klein (1987:564) lists are Aramaic ḵahal ‘to assemble, to gather’ (note also Aramaic ḵahālā ‘congregation, community, assembly’) and Akkadian quʾulu ‘to assemble, to gather’. In my opinion, the Semitic material is far too uncertain to be included in this entry.

3. Beekes (2010.II:1463—1464) rejects comparison of Sanskrit kūla-ḥ ‘generation, family, crowd’ with Greek τέλος in the meaning ‘division of an army’ as well as derivation from Proto-Indo-European kʷel-*. Moreover, this is not even the primary meaning of Greek τέλος. Needless to say, other scholars disagree with Beekes here. Thus, on deeper investigation, the Indo-European material cited by Illič-Svityč is also fraught with uncertainties.

240. Küpā* ‘to boil, to swell up’: Indo-European keup-/ keuHp- ‘to boil, to evaporate’ ~ Altaic k’öpä-* ‘to swell up, to foam’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:841) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k’öp’i* (~ -e) (= kʰópʰi*) ‘foam’.

Bomhard (no. 436) would include Proto-Indo-European keup-/ keuHp- ‘to boil, to evaporate’ under the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Yukaghir, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan — he does not include the Altaic material listed by Illič-Svityč:

Proto-Nostratic root kʰaw-* (~ kʰəw-*):

(vb.) kʰaw-* ‘to swell, to expand, to inflate, to grow, to increase’;

(n.) kʰaw-a* ‘accumulation, inflation, expansion, growth; heap, pile; height’

241. KÚčá* ‘woven basket’: (?) Hamito-Semitic qʷs/k(w)s ‘woven basket’ ~ Indo-European kʷos-* ‘woven basket, woven article’ ~ Uralic kuća-/ kočá ‘birch basket, birch vessel’. Rejected.

Comment: Though the semantics are acceptable, this etymology is deeply flawed on many levels when it comes to sound correspondences.

242. KUm*_Λ ‘to swallow, to devour’: Hamito-Semitic q(w)m* ‘to devour, to eat’ ~ Indo-European k^hem-* ‘to swallow, to gulp down’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

243. KUp/a* ‘pile, heap’: Indo-European keup-/keub-* ‘pile’ ~ Dravidian kupp(a)-/kuvΛ-* ‘pile; to pile up’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. There is nothing from the material cited from the Nostratic daughter languages to justify reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic initial ejective */K-/ (= */k’-/).
2. I would include the Proto-Indo-European form under entry no. 240 (see above) but not the Proto-Dravidian form.

244. KUr*_Λ ‘short’: Hamito-Semitic q(w)r/kr ‘short’ ~ Dravidian kuɽ* ‘short, small’ ~ Altaic k^hor/u-* ‘short; to lessen’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Proto-Afrasian q(w)r* should be removed, while kr* can stay.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:843—844) reconstruct Proto-Altaic k^horu* (= k^horu*) ‘short; to diminish, to grow less’.

Proto-Nostratic root k^{wh}ar-* (~ k^{wh}ar-*):

(vb.) k^{wh}ar-* ‘to cut short, to reduce, to decrease, to diminish, to lessen’;

(n.) k^{wh}ar-a* ‘shortness’; (adj.) ‘short’

Derivative of:

(vb.) k^{wh}ar-* ‘to cut’;

(n.) k^{wh}ar-a* ‘piece cut off; knife’

245. K*_Λ directive particle: Hamito-Semitic k(//q ?)* directive particle ~ Uralic -kkΛ/-kΛ suffix of lative, a postpositional directive particle ~ Dravidian -kkΛ/-kΛ suffix of dative-lative ~ Altaic -kΛ* postpositional directive particle, suffix of dative-lative. Strong.

Comment: Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.31) reconstructs the following directive particle based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Elamite, Kartvelian (Svan), Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, Gilyak / Nivkh, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic -k^ha* relational (directive) particle meaning 'direction to or towards; motion to or towards'.

ILLIČ-SVITYČ'S NOSTRATIC DICTIONARY: VOLUME 2

246. (?) -l/a/* suffix of collective nouns: (?) Uralic -la* collective suffix ~ Dravidian -l* plural suffix ~ Altaic -l(a)* collective suffix. Strong.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.25) reconstructs the following plural/collective marker based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Uralic, Altaic, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic -la* plural/collective marker.

247. (Descriptive) lak_Λ* 'to lick': Hamito-Semitic lq* 'to lick' ~ Kartvelian lōk-/lak- 'to lick' ~ Indo-European lak-* 'to lick, to lap' ~ Uralic lakka-* 'to lick, to lap' ~ Dravidian nakk-/nāk- 'to lick'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed. It should be replaced by lik'- (traditional reconstruction liĝ- 'to lick', found in Germanic [cf. Kroonen 2013:337]) (see below).
3. The Proto-Dravidian form should be removed.
4. Based upon the evidence from Afrasian and Kartvelian, reconstructing Proto-Nostratic medial -ḳ-* (= -k'-*) is fully justified here.
5. There appear to have been several similar words for 'to lick' beginning with l-* in Proto-Nostratic.

Proto-Nostratic root lak'-* (~ lək'-), lik'- (~ lek'-), luk'- (~ lok'-*) (onomatopoeic):

- (vb.) lak'-, lik'-, luk'-* 'to lick';
 (n.) lak'-a*, lik'-a*, luk'-a* 'licking'

248. -la* suffix of denominative verbs: Uralic -la* 'suffix of denominative verbs' ~ Altaic -lā/-lā̃ suffix of denominative verbs. Strong.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:186—190) reconstruct a Proto-Altaic derivational suffix -l-* with the following functions: (A) deverbative nominal and (B) denominative nominal (attributive). They note (p. 190):

It seems in fact possible to unite both usages of PA -l-*, by assigning it a general original attributive (denominative or deverbative) meaning. But we must stress that only with the latter meaning did the suffix become a part of the Common Altaic inflectional paradigm. In some daughter branches it has penetrated the nominal paradigm as well ...

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.43) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic “nominalizer” based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Eskimo. Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 18, §18.12) speculates that this derivational suffix may have been used to form deverbative nouns.

Proto-Nostratic -l-* nominalizer.

249. lAsA* ‘to rub, to damage’: Kartvelian les-* ‘to rub, to damage’ ~ Indo-European les-* ‘weak, destroyed, bad’ ~ Dravidian nac-* ‘to wear out; to cause disease; to weaken’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Dravidian form should be removed. Proto-Dravidian initial /n-/* does not correspond either to Proto-Kartvelian initial /l-/* or to Proto-Indo-European initial /l-/*.
2. Klimov (1998:109) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian les-* ‘to rub, to sharpen’ — see also Fähnrich 2007:269 and Fähnrich—Sardshweladse 1995:220.
3. In view of the alleged Germanic (cf. Gothic lasiws ‘weak’, etc.) and Slavic cognates (cf. Serbo-Croatian lōš ‘poor, bad, evil’, etc.), the Proto-Indo-European form should be reconstructed as les-/los-, and this is, indeed, discussed by Illič-Svityč. However, even though the Germanic ~ Slavic comparison is accepted by Derksen (2008:285—286), he rightly notes that it has been rejected by others (such as Trubačev) on semantic grounds.
4. Illič-Svityč also brings in Latin les-tu-s in sub-lestus ‘slight, weak, trivial’. This form is not in De Vaan (2008), but it is in Ernout—Meillet (1985:661), who declare that it is of uncertain etymology (“étymologie incertaine”).
5. Although Illič-Svityč has done an excellent job of discussing the Kartvelian and Indo-European evidence, there are too many uncertainties involved within Indo-European to make this a totally convincing Nostratic etymology. Nonetheless, it is not without merit. Consequently, I am giving Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt here.

250. (?) l/e/pʿA* ‘spleen’: Hamito-Semitic lp* ‘spleen’ ~ Uralic l/e/ppä* ‘spleen’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:875) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic liapʿV* (= liapʰV*) ‘spleen’.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:242) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian läpp3* (däpp3*) or lepp3* (depp3*) ‘spleen’.
3. It is difficult to reconstruct a common Proto-Indo-European word for ‘spleen’. For example, Mayrhofer (1956—1980.II:385—386) lists the following variants: sphl-ǵh-, sphl-i-ǵh-, sphl-i-ǰ-ǵh-, sphl-ŋ-ǵh-.
4. There are two variants of this stem in Afrasian, as follows:

Proto-Afrasian pal-* ~ lap-* (metathesis from pal-) ‘spleen’: Proto-Highland East Cushitic hifella ‘spleen’ (prefix hi-, secondary -e-) > Hadiyya hilleffa ‘spleen’; Kambata efeella ‘spleen’; Sidamo efelegg’o ‘spleen’. East Cushitic: Afar aleefu ‘spleen’ (prefix ʔa-, secondary -e-). West Chadic lap-* ‘spleen’ > Sura llap ‘spleen’; Angas lap ‘spleen’; Kulere ma-laf ‘liver’. Orël—Stolbova (1995:358, no. 1651) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian lap-* ‘spleen’

Bomhard (no. 86) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) pʰal-a* (metathesized variant lapʰ-a* in Uralic, Altaic, and part of Afrasian) ‘spleen’

251. (?) lewdä* ‘to search, to find’: Uralic Lewdä-* ‘to find’ ~ Dravidian [nēt-/nāt-* ‘to search for’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Uralic medial -/δ-/* is not a reflex of Proto-Nostratic medial -/d-/. Proto-Uralic initial /L-/ does not correspond to Proto-Dravidian initial /n-/. Proto-Dravidian initial /n-/ is not a reflex of Proto-Nostratic initial /l-/*.
 2. Questionable semantics.
252. lipʿa* ‘sticky’: Hamito-Semitic lP-* ‘to smear with grease/fat; fat’ ~ Kartvelian lap-/lp- ‘dirt, clay’ ~ Indo-European leip-* ‘to stick to, to smear with grease/fat; sticky’ ~ Uralic Lipa-* ‘slippery, sticky’ ~ Dravidian nīv-* ‘to smear with grease/fat, to stroke’ ~ Altaic lipa-* ‘to stick to; sticky, viscous’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Dravidian initial */n-/ is not a reflex of Proto-Nostratic initial */l-/.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:861) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic lāj̥p*^V (= lāj̥p^hV*) ‘to glue, to stick to’.
253. */-l/ adjectival suffix: Kartvelian /-l/-el/*-il- suffix of participles and deverbative nouns; /-il/-ol- diminutive suffix ~ Indo-European */-l- suffix of denominative and deverbative adjectives ~ Uralic /-la/-lä suffix of adjectives, nouns, and diminutives ~ Altaic */-l suffix of deverbative nouns. Strong.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:186—190) reconstruct a Proto-Altaiic derivational suffix */-l-, which has two functions: (A) deverbative nominal and (B) denominative nominal (attributive). It is not listed in Robbeets 2015.
2. The Proto-Uralic derivational suffix reconstructed by Illič-Svityč is not in the list presented by Aikio (to appear, pp. 35—41, §1.4.5 Word Formation), but it is in Collinder (1960:259—260 [272—273, 276—277]).
3. Klimov (1998:46) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian */-el affix of noun derivation and (1998:81) Proto-Kartvelian */-il- an affix producing participles.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.43) reconstructs a Proto-Nostratic derivational suffix */-l- ‘nominalizer’, which may have been used to form deverbative nouns.

254. (Descriptive) */l'ama ‘to knead, to mash, to soften’: Hamito-Semitic lm* ‘soft, tender’ ~ Indo-European lem-* ‘to break; weak’ ~ Uralic l'ama* ‘to knead, to mash, to crush; weak’ ~ Dravidian ñam*_λ- ‘to squeeze, to knead, to mash, to break’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Dravidian form should be removed. Proto-Dravidian initial */ñ-/ is not a reflex of Proto-Nostratic initial */l'-/ (= */ly-/).
2. Rédei (1986—1988:684) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian lama* ‘weakness; weak’. This appears to rule out the need to reconstruct Proto-Nostratic initial */l'-/ (= */ly-/).
3. The Afrasian evidence presented by Illič-Svityč is rather limited: a single, questionable form from Semitic (Akkadian lamāmu ‘to chew’), a single form from Berber (Tashelhiyt / Shilha ilmad ‘to be soft’), and a handful of forms from Central Cushitic, all meaning ‘to be soft’. Though limited, the evidence from Afrasian is more than adequate — both the sound correspondences and the semantics match what is found in the other Nostratic daughter languages.

4. The Proto-Indo-European form is solid (cf. Pokorny 1959:674).
5. Not in Bomhard (this book).

255. l/a/Ḳʌ* 'leg': Hamito-Semitic lq-/lk- 'leg, foot' ~ Indo-European lek-* 'leg' ~ (?) Uralic lakʌ-* 'leg' ~ (?) Dravidian tāk* 'to walk'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — the Dravidian form does not belong here.
2. There is no basis whatsoever for reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic medial ejective /-Ḳ-/* (= /-k'-/*).
3. Illič-Svityč has confused two separate Proto-Afrasian stems.

Proto-Nostratic lak^h-* (~ lək^h-*):

(vb.) lak^h-* 'to go on foot, to travel on foot';

(n.) lak^h-a* 'leg, foot'

Here is the Afrasian evidence Bomhard includes in his etymology:

Proto-Afrasian lak-* (~ lik-* ~ luk-*) 'leg, foot': Berber: Tuareg alkəm 'to follow, to pursue, to accompany on a trip, to follow on foot'; Tamazight alkəm 'to reach, to arrive at, to reunite with, to overtake'; Tachelhiyt / Shilha alkəm 'to arrive at, to reunite with, to reach'. Proto-East Cushitic lak-/*lik-/luk- 'leg, foot' > Saho lak 'leg, foot'; Somali lug 'leg, foot'; Arbore luk-a 'leg, foot'; Sidamo lekk-a 'leg, foot'; Bayso luk-i 'leg, foot'; Galla / Oromo luk-a 'thigh'; Burji lúkk-a 'leg'; Gedeo / Darasa lekka- 'leg, foot'; Hadiyya lokko 'leg, foot'; Kambata lokka-ta 'leg, foot'; Elmolo luk 'leg, foot'; Gidole lukk-et 'leg, foot'; Alaba lokk-a 'leg, foot'; Tsamay luk-te 'leg, foot'; Gawwada lux-ti 'leg, foot'.

Note: The Cushitic forms require the reconstruction of multiple vowels in Proto-Afrasian. Yet, all of these forms clearly belong together.

256. lap'a* 'flat': (?) Hamito-Semitic lP-* 'flat, palm' ~ Indo-European lep-* 'palm, paw' ~ Uralic lappa/lapa 'flat, paw, shoulder blade' ~ Altaic lapʌ-* 'flat, leaf'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:236) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lapa* 'flat surface; leaf, page (of a book), etc.' Rédei (1986—1988:237) also reconstructs Proto-

Uralic lappʒ* ‘flat; flat surface’. These reconstructions eliminate the need to posit a Proto-Nostratic initial /l-/*.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:867—868) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic lápʲi* (= lapʰi*) ‘flat, broad’.
 3. The Afrasian material cited by Illič-Svityč is rather limited and somewhat uncertain.
 4. Not in Bomhard (this book).
257. lA* locative particle: Hamito-Semitic l* locative-directive particle ~ (?)
 Kartvelian -la* locative suffix ~ Uralic -la/-lä locative suffix ~ (?)
 Dravidian -uʎ* locative suffix ~ Altaic [-lā/-lā̄ locative suffix]. Strong.

Comments:

1. Originally, this was an independent particle in Afrasian. It shows up as a directive prefix in Semitic and as a directive suffix in Cushitic. Diakonoff (1988:61) reconstructs an Afrasian directive -l* and notes:

-l: directive (in the Cushitic Bilin, Saho); the Semitic ‘dative’ and ‘directive’ preposition lV- (also > prefixed accusative marker in the later Aramaic dialects), and the Egyptian preposition n (< l-*).

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:859) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic la-* ‘on this side, near’. They note: “Originally a monosyllabic deictic root with directive affixes.”
3. Collinder (1960:291—292) notes:

In western FU and in Samoyed, the local cases are mostly formed by means of a coaffix (l*, s*, ś*, k*), i.e., the primordial case ending (-na* ~ -nä*, for instance) is added to a derivative, not immediately to the word stem.

Collinder then goes on to discuss the developments in the various Uralic daughter languages. Illič-Svityč has done a good job of summarizing the Uralic developments. The only disagreement I have is with the reconstruction of Proto-Uralic initial /l-/. The evidence points to Proto-Uralic initial /l-/ instead. This means that the Proto-Nostratic form should be reconstructed as lA*.

4. The Dravidian form should be removed.
 5. Not in Bomhard (this book).
258. lejna* ‘soft, weak’: Hamito-Semitic ljn* ‘soft, weak’ ~ Indo-European lei-* ‘soft, weak, thin’ ~ Uralic lejna* ‘weak’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:246) reconstructs Proto-Uralic leña* (= lenʷa*) ‘weak, slack’. Rédei’s reconstruction makes it impossible to compare the Proto-Uralic form with the Proto-Afrasian and Proto-Indo-European forms cited by Illič-Svityč and, consequently, it must be removed from this etymology.
2. The reconstruction of the Proto-Afrasian form is questionable. Egyptian nmj ‘to be weary, inert’ most certainly does not belong here. It cannot be separated from nmw ‘weariness, inertness’ and nmjw ‘the dead’ (that is, ‘the inert ones’).

259. liwa* ‘mud, silt’: Indo-European leu(H)-* ‘mud, silt’ ~ Uralic liwa* ‘mud, sand, bog’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:250) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian liwa* ‘sand’. It is becoming increasingly evident that there is no justification whatsoever for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic initial /l-/. All of the instances in which Illič-Svityč posited such a sound should be reinterpreted as having had initial /l-/ instead.
2. Beekes (2010.I:878) derives Greek λῦμα ‘dirt, waste, garbage’ from Proto-Indo-European luH-* ‘dirt; to pollute, to contaminate’. According to Beekes:

This verb lives on in Lat. pol-luō < por-luō* and led to the verbal noun Lat. lutum = OIr. loth ‘excrements, dirt’. Other derivatives are Lat. lustrum ‘puddle, marsh’ and German river names like Lune and Lienz (from Luantia*), cf. Λύμαξ.

3. In view of the more restricted meaning assigned by Rédei to the Proto-Uralic form he reconstructs and taking into consideration the meaning assigned to the Proto-Indo-European ancestor of Greek λῦμα reconstructed by Beekes, the comparison with Proto-Indo-European seems unlikely.
260. tonKa* ‘to bend’: Indo-European lenk-* ‘to bend’ ~ Uralic toŋka* ‘to bend, to chip off; to droop, to dangle’ ~ Dravidian toŋk-* ‘to bend, to dangle’ ~ Altaic toŋa-* ‘to bend, to incline, to bow’. Weak.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Dravidian form should be removed from this etymology. Proto-Nostratic initial /l-/* (rather /l-/* see above, comments to no. 259) does not yield Proto-Dravidian initial /t-/*.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:256) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian lyŋk3-* ‘to be split apart’ as the ancestor of the Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.

3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1458) reconstruct Proto-Altaic tʰoŋe* (~ -i) (= tʰoŋe*) ‘to bow, to bend’ to account for the Altaic evidence cited by Illič-Svityč. Though a comparison of the Proto-Altaic form reconstructed by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak with the Proto-Dravidian form reconstructed by Illič-Svityč may still be a possibility, the comparison with the alleged Proto-Indo-European and Proto-Uralic forms cannot be maintained.
261. lūkʷ* ‘to pierce, to insert’: Uralic lūkkʷ* ‘to pierce, to insert’ ~ Dravidian [tukk-* ‘to insert, to push’ ~ Altaic lūkä-* ‘to pierce’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Here, again, there is no justification, based upon the evidence from the Nostratic daughter languages cited by Illič-Svityč, for reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic medial ejective /-k̟-/* (= /-kʰ-/*).
 2. The Proto-Dravidian form must be removed due to faulty sound correspondences.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:880) reconstruct Proto-Altaic lūkʷi* (~ -o-) (= lūkʰi*) ‘to break through’ to account for the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.
 4. Rédei (1986—1988:248—249) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lukkä-* (lūkkä-*) ‘to push, to shove, to thrust’.
 5. The Proto-Uralic and Proto-Altaic vowels do not match. The semantics are slightly off as well.
262. Labʷ* ‘to seize, to acquire’: Hamito-Semitic lb-* ‘to seize, to acquire’ ~ Indo-European /e/bh-* ‘to seize, to acquire’ ~ Altaic [labʷ-* ‘to grab with the teeth’]. Strong.

Comment: Bomhard separates this entry into two Proto-Nostratic etymologies:

Proto-Nostratic root lab-* (~ lʌb-*):

(vb.) lab-* ‘to take hold of, to grasp’;

(n.) lab-a* ‘taking, grasping’

Possible derivative:

(vb.) lab-* ‘to eat greedily, to lap (up), to suck milk’;

(n.) lab-a* ‘eating, sucking’

Proto-Nostratic root lab-* (~ lǝb-*):

(vb.) lab-* 'to eat greedily, to lap (up), to suck milk';

(n.) lab-a* 'eating, sucking'

Possibly related to or derived from:

(vb.) lab-* 'to take hold of, to grasp';

(n.) lab-a* 'taking, grasping'

263. LaHm/u-* 'swamp': (?) Kartvelian [lam-* 'silt, dampness'] ~ Indo-European lehm-* 'swamp, puddle' ~ Uralic Lampe* 'swamp, small lake' ~ Altaic lāmu* 'swamp, sea'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1964 and 1998) does not reconstruct a Proto-Kartvelian lam-* 'silt, dampness', nor do Fähnrich (2007) or Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995). The only Kartvelian form that Illič-Svityč cites is from Georgian: lami (ლამი) '(river, etc.) silt, sand; black loam; dew, dampness'. This does not appear to be particularly close semantically to the forms from the other Nostratic daughter languages cited by Illič-Svityč.
2. Illič-Svityč bases the reconstruction of the Proto-Indo-European form on the evidence of several marginal forms from Latin and Balto-Slavic. However, De Vaan (2008:324) questions the nature of the relationship between Latin lāma 'marshy place, bog' and the Balto-Slavic forms cited by Illič-Svityč:

In theory, Latv. lāma and Latin lāma may both go back to leh₂-mo-*, but the isolated position of lāma and the possibility that the Baltic words derive from the root lem-* 'to break' render the connection rather uncertain.

3. Rédei (1986—1988:235) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lampe* 'puddle, pool, bog, swamp'. This is essentially the same as Illič-Svityč's reconstruction.
 4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:866—867) reconstruct Proto-Altaic lāmò* 'sea, wave'. The Mongolian forms cited by Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak do, in fact, mean 'marsh, swamp' (болото), but the putative cognates from the other Altaic daughter languages point to 'sea, wave'.
 5. The most secure forms supporting this etymology come from Uralic and Altaic, and even these are a bit shaky. I would like to give Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt here, but there are just too many uncertainties involved.
 6. See also the comments for the next entry (no. 264).
264. Lamd/i/* 'low, depression': Indo-European lendh-* 'valley, plain' ~ Uralic Lamte* 'low, depression'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:235—236) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lamte* ‘low; low-lying ground, lowland’, while Décsy (1990:102) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lamta* ‘deep, low; lowlands’.
2. The Proto-Nostratic form reconstructed by Illič-Svityč is an extended form, that is, lam-d-a* ‘lowland, low-lying ground, any piece of land’. The unextended Proto-Nostratic stem would be lam-a* (n.) ‘lowland, low-lying ground, any piece of land’; (adj.) ‘low’, which may be preserved in Indo-European in the following Balto-Slavic forms (cf. Bomhard, no. 952):

Lithuanian lomà ‘hollow, valley, plot, lump’; Latvian lāma ‘hollow, pool’; Russian (dial.) lam [лам] ‘(Pskov) meadow covered with small trees and bushes that is occasionally flooded; (Novgorod) wasteland’; Slovenian lam ‘pit; (dial.) quarry’; Polish (obsolete) lam ‘quarry, bend’; Serbo-Croatian lām (dial.) ‘knee-joint, underground passage’.

These are the very Balto-Slavic forms that Illič-Svityč tried to include under the preceding entry (no. 263).

3. The extended stem is preserved in Indo-European in the following forms from the daughter languages (cf. Bomhard, no. 952):

Proto-Indo-European lendh-/londh-/l̥ndh-* ‘low-lying ground, lowland, any piece of land’: Old Irish land ‘open place’; Middle Welsh llan ‘enclosure, yard’; Breton lann ‘heath’; Cornish lan ‘piece of land’; Gothic land ‘land, country’; Old Icelandic land ‘land (as opposed to sea), country’; Old English land ‘earth, land, soil’; Old Frisian lond, land ‘land’; Old Saxon land ‘land’; Old High German lant ‘land’ (New High German Land); Old Prussian (acc. sg.) lindan ‘valley’; Russian ljadá [ляда] ‘overgrown field’; Czech lada ‘fallow land’.

4. Dolgopolsky (2008:1225—1226, no. 1303) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic lam[V]d V* ‘low’. Note: The Altaic forms included by Dolgopolsky are rejected by Bomhard (no. 952).

Proto-Nostratic root lam-* (~ ləm-*):

(vb.) lam-* ‘to bend down, to stoop down, to sink down, to lie down, to duck down; to be or become bent down, curved down; to be low’;

(n.) lam-a* ‘lowland, low-lying ground, any piece of land’; (adj.) ‘low’

Extended form:

(vb.) lam-V-d-* ‘to bend down, to stoop down, to sink down, to lie down, to duck down; to be or become bent down, curved down; to be low’;

(n.) lam-d-a* 'lowland, low-lying ground, any piece of land'; (adj.) 'low'

265. L/a/ʔa* 'damp': Kartvelian lʔw-* 'to moisten' ~ Indo-European lat-* 'damp, moist soil'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Kartvelian medial -/t-/* (= -/t'-/) does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European medial -/t-/ (= -/tʰ-/*).

266. Lawša* 'weak, limp': Indo-European leus-* 'weak, limp' ~ Uralic Lawša* 'weak, limp'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:685) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Volgaic lawča* (lawša*) 'weak, limp'.
2. There are several problems involved in this etymology. First, the Uralic material is only from Finno-Volgaic — it is not more widely attested in Uralic. Next, the reconstruction of the Proto-Finno-Volgaic form is uncertain. Therefore, it is prudent to withhold judgment until more evidence can be presented to support this etymology.

267. L/ä/ja* 'water; to pour': Hamito-Semitic lj* 'water' ~ Indo-European leiH-* 'to pour' ~ (?) Uralic Läja* 'liquid, river'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:248) reconstructs Proto-Uralic lijz* 'sap (of a tree)' as the source of the Uralic forms listed by Illič-Svityč. Collinder (1977:51) lists the following: Votyak / Udmurt li 'sap'; Zyrian / Komi li 'sap'; (?) Kamassian leeji 'sap'. The semantic distance between the Uralic forms and the alleged cognates in the other Nostratic daughter languages cited by Illič-Svityč is far too great.
2. The Egyptian form (nwj-t 'water') cited by Illič-Svityč cannot be separated from nmw 'primordial waters', which shows up in Coptic as nun [𐪎𐪏𐪏] 'the depths of Hell, Hell; the depths of the ocean; the abyss'. Note also Egyptian nīw 'primordial waters'. The Coptic form makes it clear that we are dealing with initial /n-/ here and not l-/*. Thus, there is no basis for deriving nwj-t 'water' from a putative Proto-Afrasian lj*.
3. The ancestor of the Berber forms cited by Illič-Svityč is better reconstructed as Proto-Berber lw* (cf. Haddadou 2006—2007:117, no. 453).
4. Altogether, there is little justification for this etymology.

268. (?) Lopʔa* 'peeled bark (rind), thin layer of plant material': Hamito-Semitic lp-* 'peeled rind' ~ Indo-European leup-/leub-/lep-* 'peel; peeled bark, leaf' ~ Uralic Lopʔa* 'skinned bark, leaf'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. The vowels/diphthongs do not match.

269. Lub*λ ‘to thirst’: Hamito-Semitic lwb* ‘to thirst’ ~ Indo-European leubh-* ‘to desire passionately’. Weak.

Comments:

1. The Egyptian, Berber, and Cushitic forms cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here — Illič-Svityč was right to preface the Berber and Cushitic forms with a question mark (?).
2. Arabic lāba (root lwb) ‘to be thirsty’, lawb ‘thirst’ is a respectable match for Proto-Indo-European leubh-* ‘to desire passionately’, but it is isolated within Semitic and may be a borrowing.

270. Luk*λ ‘small carnivore’: Kartvelian lekʷ-* ‘young of carnivore, puppy’ ~ Indo-European luk-/lunk-* ‘lynx’ ~ Uralic LuK*λ ‘fox, marten’ ~ Altaic loka/luka* ‘lynx, fox, dog’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:880) reconstruct Proto-Altaic l[ù]k[ʷ]* (= l[ù]k[ʰ]*) ‘lynx, wild cat’.

271. Laga* ‘to lie’: Kartvelian lag-/lg-* ‘to lay, to plant’ ~ Indo-European leg-* ‘to lie, to lie down’. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root lag-* (~ ləg-*):

(vb.) lag-* ‘to put, place, lay, or set down’;

(n.) lag-a* ‘the act of putting, placing, laying, or setting down’

272. (?) Lah*λ ‘to be ill’: Hamito-Semitic l/h/* ‘to be ill’ ~ Kartvelian [le/x-* ‘to be ill’]. Weak.

Comment: The evidence from the daughter languages adduced to support this etymology is very sparse. Accordingly, the Afrasian and Kartvelian proto-forms cannot be reliably reconstructed.

273. (Descriptive) Laš*λ ‘to lick’: Hamito-Semitic lš-* ‘to lick’, liš-* ‘tongue’ ~ Proto-Kartvelian laš-* ‘lip’, lš-wn-* ‘to lick’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Orël—Stolbova (1995:361, no. 1666) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian les-* 'tongue'; Ehret (1995:406, no. 827) reconstructs Proto-Afrasian lis-* 'to lick' (Proto-Semitic līsn-* ~ lasn-* 'tongue'). In my opinion, an ejective sibilant should not be reconstructed for Proto-Afrasian.
2. Klimov (1964:120 and 1998:107) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian laš-* 'lip' and (1964:122 and 1998:111) lš-wn-* 'to eat (rudely)'. See also Schmidt 1962:222; Fähnrich 2007:265; Fähnrich—Sardshweladse 1995:216—217.

Proto-Nostratic root las^{y-}* (~ laš^{y-}), lis^{y-} (~ les^{y-}), lus^{y-} (~ los^{y-}*) (?) (onomatopoeic):

(vb.) las^{y-}, lis^{y-}, lus^{y-}* 'to lick, to lap (up)';

(n.) las^{y-a}, lis^{y-a}, lus^{y-a}* 'tongue; lip'

Note: The Proto-Nostratic medial vowel is uncertain.

274. (?) λa/mH/u* 'bird-cherry': Uralic δ'ōme* 'bird-cherry' ~ Altaic /d/imu* 'bird-cherry, buckthorn'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Neither the initial consonants nor the vowels match in the forms cited from the Nostratic daughter languages. The semantics, however, are perfect.
2. Not in Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:65) reconstructs Proto-Uralic δ'eme* (δ'ōme*) 'bird-cherry' (cf. Finnish tuomi 'bird-cherry').

275. magu* 'bad': Hamito-Semitic mgw/mwwg 'bad' ~ Altaic [magu* 'bad']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The evidence from the daughter languages adduced to support this etymology is very sparse.
2. Poppe (1955:83) reconstructs Proto-Mongolian mayu* 'bad, evil'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:894—895) include the Mongolian forms cited by Illič-Svityč under Proto-Altaic maja* 'to miss, to fail; bad luck'.

276. majλa* 'honey, nectar': Indo-European mel-* 'honey' ~ Uralic majδ'a* 'nectar' ~ Dravidian [maṭṭ-/miṭṭ-* 'honey, toddy'] ~ (?) Altaic [/m/alλa* 'honey']. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Indo-European medial */-l-/ does not correspond to Proto-Uralic medial */-jδ'-/ or Proto-Dravidian medial */-ḷ-/-/.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:697) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian majδ'z* ‘nectar’. While the semantics are good, the phonology does not correspond to anything found in the other Nostratic daughter languages.
3. Eliminating the Proto-Uralic form means that the Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is erroneous.
4. The Proto-Indo-European form is universally reconstructed as melit* ‘honey’ (cf. Pokorny 1959:723—724; Watkins 1985:41; Mallory—Adams 1997:271; Kloekhorst 2008b:580—581; etc.).
5. The Proto-Dravidian forms (maṭṭ-/miṭṭ- ‘honey, toddy’) go back to Proto-Nostratic mad-w-a* ‘honey, mead’ (cf. Bomhard, no. 849).
6. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:897—898) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic male* ‘honey; plant oil’.
7. Thus, the only possible cognates in this etymology are Proto-Indo-European and Proto-Altaiic.

Bomhard (no. 861) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) mal-a* ‘honey’.

277. majrʌ* ‘young male’: Hamito-Semitic m(j)r* ‘man, young male animal (cub, whelp, etc.)’ ~ Indo-European mer-* (mer-jo-*) ‘young man’ ~ Dravidian mār-/mār- ‘young male animal’ ~ Altaic [miarä-* ‘to marry’]. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Nostratic reconstruction is erroneous.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:923) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic mjàrà* (~ -r̥-) ‘male, mature’.
3. Orël—Stolbova (1995:377—378, no. 1740) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian mar-/maraʔ- ‘man’.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) mar-a* ‘(young) man, male (human or animal)’

278. malʌ* ‘numerous, abundant’: (?) Hamito-Semitic ml-* ‘good’ ~ Indo-European mel-* ‘numerous, abundant’ ~ Dravidian mal* ‘abundant’. Strong.

Comment: The Proto-Afrasian form reconstructed by Illič-Svityč does not belong here. Instead, it belongs under the following Nostratic etymology, reconstructed by Bomhard (no. 860) based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Etruscan, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root mal-* (~ məl-*):

(vb.) mal-* 'to be favorably disposed towards, to care about, to be devoted to, to like';

(n.) mal-a* 'goodness, pleasantness'; (adj.) 'good, pleasant, pleasing'

Proto-Nostratic root mal-* (~ məl-*):

(vb.) mal-* 'to fill, to be or become full, to increase';

(n.) mal-a* 'fullness, abundance'; (adj.) 'full, filled, abundant, numerous, many'

279. (?) mana* 'to stop, to detain': Hamito-Semitic [mnʕ* 'to detain, to hinder'] ~ Dravidian mān-* 'stop' ~ Altaic [mana-* 'to finish, to destroy']. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:902) reconstruct Proto-Altaic mān[u]* 'useless, insufficient' as the source of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.
2. The Arabic form cited by Illič-Svityč has the following semantic range (cf. Wehr 1976:926—927): Arabic manaʕa (vb.) 'to stop, to detain, to keep from entering or passing; to hinder, to prevent; to keep, to restrain, to hold back; to bar, to block, to obstruct; to withdraw, to take away, to deprive; to forbid, to interdict, to prohibit; to decline to accept, to declare impossible or out of the question; to refuse, to deny, to withhold; to stop, to cease; to abstain, to refrain; to ward off, to avert, to keep away; to protect, to guard; to defend', manʕ (n.) 'hindering, obstruction; prevention, obviation, preclusion; prohibition, interdiction, ban, injunction, impeding; stop, closure, discontinuation, embargo; withdrawal, dispossession, deprivation; detention, withholding', and the rest of the Semitic cognates are also as varied.
3. Bomhard (no. 875) includes some of the material cited by Illič-Svityč in his alternative etymology (see below), plus he adds new material.
4. Dolgopolsky (2008:1360, no. 1437) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic mæɲɿV* (= mæɲyV* ?) 'to hold, to carry' and (2008:1360—1361, no. 1438) Proto-Nostratic maɲy[ú]* 'paw, foot/leg of animals'.

Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Yukaghir, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root man^y-* (~ mən^y-*):

(vb.) man^y-* ‘to hold, to take’;

(n.) man^y-a* ‘hand, paw’

280. manga* ‘strong’: Hamito-Semitic [mΛ(n)g-* ‘strong, heavy, abundant’] ~ (?) Kartvelian [mag-* ‘strong’] ~ Indo-European mengh-/m(e)negh-* ‘abundant, numerous’ ~ Altaic [maŋa* ‘hard, strong, stable’]. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. The Proto-Kartvelian form does not belong here. Illič-Svityč was right to add a question mark (?).
2. Bomhard (no. 872) includes the following Cushitic evidence in his version of this etymology:

East Cushitic: Afar mango- ‘to be much, many’; Saho mango ‘many’, mang- ‘to be full, numerous’. Central Cushitic: Awngi / Awiya ménč ‘much, many’, minč^y- ‘to be many’.

3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:903) reconstruct Proto-Altaic manga* ‘big, strong’.

Proto-Nostratic root man-* (~ mən-*):

Extended form:

(vb.) man-V-g-* ‘to swell, to expand, to grow, to increase’;

(n.) man-g-a* ‘great number, large amount; abundance; multitude, crowd’; (adj.) ‘many, numerous, copious, abundant; swollen, big, fat, strong’

Related to:

(vb.) man-* ‘to swell, to expand, to grow, to increase’;

(n.) man-a* ‘multitude, crowd, herd, flock’

281. manu* ‘to think’: Hamito-Semitic mn-* ‘to think, to understand, to desire, to count’ ~ Indo-European men-* ‘to think, to recall, to mention’ ~ Altaic manΛ/monΛ (< mano-) ‘to guess, to conjure, to say’ ~ (?) Dravidian manΛ- ‘request, word’. Possible.

Comments:

1. There are at least two, possibly three, separate stems confused here: (A) to count, to reckon’ (> ‘to consider, to think’), (B) ‘to say, to speak’, and (C)

'to desire'. The first two may ultimately be related, but the third is totally distinct.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:901) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic mána* (~ -o) 'to learn, to try'.

Proto-Nostratic root man-* (~ mən-*):

(vb.) man-* 'to count, to reckon' (> 'to consider, to think' > 'to recount' > 'to say, to speak');

(n.) man-a* 'counting, reckoning'

Additionally, Bomhard (no. 873) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root man^v-* (~ mən^v-*):

(vb.) man^v-* 'to lust after, to desire passionately, to copulate with, to have sexual intercourse, to beget';

(n.) man^v-a* 'ardent desire, passion, lust'

Derivative:

(n.) man^v-a* 'progenitor, begetter, man, male; penis'

Note: We flatter ourselves when we derive man^v-a* 'progenitor, begetter, man, male; penis' from 'to consider, to think', as 'man, the thinking animal'. There is little justification for this based upon our behavior. A more likely derivation is from 'to lust after, to desire passionately, to copulate with, to have sexual intercourse, to beget', again, based upon our behavior.

282. marja* 'berry': Kartvelian mar-čq̄w-* 'strawberry' ~ Indo-European mor-* 'black-berry, mulberry' ~ Uralic marja* 'berry' ~ (?) Altaic [mür̄λ* 'berry']. Weak.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — the vowels do not match.
2. The forms assembled by Illič-Svityč may be Wanderwörter. Consequently, this etymology cannot stand as written.

Proto-Nostratic (Eurasianic only) (n.) mur-a* 'mulberry, blackberry'

Note: Bomhard includes the following Uralic material in his etymology:

Proto-Uralic mura* ‘Rubus chamaemorus, berry (Rubus)’: Finnish muura, murrain/muuraimē- ‘cloudberry, Rubus chamaemorus’; Vogul / Mansi morah ‘Rubus chamaemorus’; Ostyak / Xanty (Tremyugan) mōrəŋk, (Southern) murəh ‘Rubus chamaemorus’; Tavgi Samoyed / Nganasan muraʔka ‘Rubus chamaemorus’; Yenisei Samoyed / Enets (Hatanga) mođagga, (Baiha) moragga ‘Rubus chamaemorus’; Yurak Samoyed / Nenets marayga ‘Rubus chamaemorus’. Cf. Rédei 1986—1988:287 mura*; Collinder 1977:56; Sammallahti 1988:538 murå* ‘berry (Rubus)”; Décsy 1990:103 mura* ‘Rubus chamaemorus’.

283. mar*_A ‘tree’: Uralic m/a/re* ‘tree’ ~ Dravidian mara(m)* ‘tree’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Illič-Svityč also mentions Arabic marw- ‘a kind of tree (silex, macrua)’ and Egyptian mrw ‘Lebanese cedar’ as possible comparisons. Both are included by Dolgopolsky (2008:1393—1394, no. 1472) under Proto-Nostratic m[a]rwé* ‘tree’, while Bomhard just includes the Egyptian form.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:281) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian morz* ‘a kind of tree’.

Proto-Nostratic (n.) mar-a* ‘tree, wood’

Note: Bomhard agrees with Illič-Svityč in the reconstruction of the vowel of the Proto-Nostratic form. Dolgopolsky is more uncertain.

284. mA* formant with nominal function in relative constructions: Hamito-Semitic (ma-, mi-)/-m* derivational nominal formant ~ Kartvelian me-/m-/ma- derivational nominal prefix ~ Indo-European -mo-* derivational nominal suffix ~ Uralic -ma/-mä derivational nominal suffix ~ Dravidian -mai* derivational nominal suffix ~ Altaic -ma/-mä derivational nominal suffix. Strong.

Comments:

1. Though there is room here for refinement and interpretation here, Illič-Svityč has done a good job in supporting this Proto-Nostratic derivational formant.
2. See Robbeets (2005:965) for a discussion of the Altaic evidence.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.39) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic -m-* “nominalizer” (derivational suffix) based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Elamite, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic. He (vol. 1, Chapter 18, §18.12) further speculates that this derivational suffix may have been used to form abstract nouns.

285. -mA* suffixal formant of the marked direct object ~ Indo-European -m* suffix of accusative singular of animate nouns ~ Uralic -m* suffix of definite object ~ Dravidian -m* suffix of marked object ~ Altaic [-ba/-bä suffix of marked/definite object]. Strong.

Comment: According to Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.27), the Altaic evidence points to Proto-Altaic -m* accusative marker. See also Greenberg 2000:129.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.27) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic -ma* (together with -na*) marker of direct object based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, and Etruscan.

286. mALA* ‘mountain’: Indo-European mel-* ‘mountain, elevation’ ~ Dravidian mal-* ‘mountain’. Strong.

Bomhard (no. 858) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) mal-a* ‘hill, mountain’

287. mAnA* ‘to remain in place, to stand firmly’: Hamito-Semitic mn* ‘to remain, to be firm’ ~ Indo-European men-* ‘to remain in place’ ~ Dravidian man-* ‘to remain in place, to stand firmly’. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root man-* (~ mən-*):

(vb.) man-* ‘to stay, to remain, to abide, to dwell; to be firm, steadfast, established, enduring’;

(n.) man-a* ‘dwelling, house, home’

288. mArA* ‘spot, dirty’: Indo-European mer-* ‘dirty, dark’ ~ Dravidian mar-* ‘dark spot’. Strong.

Bomhard (no. 882) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and (?) Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic root mar-* (~ mər-*):

(vb.) mar-* ‘to soil, to stain’;

(n.) mar-a* ‘spot, stain, dirt’; (adj.) ‘dark, dirty, soiled’

289. mä* 1st person plural inclusive pronoun: Hamito-Semitic [m(n)* 1st person plural inclusive pronoun] ~ Kartvelian m-* marker of object of 1st person plural inclusive ~ Indo-European me-s* 1st person plural ~ Uralic mä-/me-* 1st person plural ~ Dravidian mā* stem of 1st plural pronoun ~ Altaic bE* (oblique mE-n*) 1st person plural exclusive (secondary function). Strong.

Comments:

1. There is room for interpretation here.
2. The Afrasian evidence comes from Chadic.
3. According to Krishnamurti (2003:246—249), Proto-Dravidian had one 1st person singular form, yān-/yan-* ‘I’, and two 1st person plural forms, (A) yām-/yam-* ‘we (exclusive)’ and (B) ñām-/ñam-* ‘we (inclusive)’.
4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:341—342) reconstruct Proto-Altaic bi̯* 1st person pronoun: Proto-Tungusic bi*; bue*, mü-n-* ‘I; we’; Proto-Mongolian bi*, min-; ba-, man-* ‘I; we’; Proto-Turkic be-* ‘I; we’.

Bomhard (no. 892) treats the 1st person personal pronouns, singular and plural (inclusive), together and reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, Etruscan, Eskimo-Aleut, and Gilyak / Nivkh:

Proto-Nostratic first person singular mi* (~ me*) ‘I, me’, first person plural (inclusive) ma* (~ mə*) ‘we, us’

Note: See no. 299 below.

290. mä* prohibitive particle: Hamito-Semitic m(j)* prohibitive and negative particle ~ Kartvelian mā/mō prohibitive and negative particle ~ Indo-European mē* prohibitive particle ~ Dravidian ma-* stem of prohibitive and negative elements ~ Altaic mä-/bä-* prohibitive and negative particle. Strong.

Comments:

1. There does not seem to be any basis for reconstructing j/* at the Proto-Afrasian level, the alleged variant mj* notwithstanding. Ehret (1995:301, no. 572) reconstructs Proto-Afrasian ma-* ‘to not have’. See also Diakonoff 1988:83, §4.4.3.

2. Bomhard (no. 846) does not include the Dravidian evidence cited by Illič-Svityč. Burrow—Emeneau (1984:420, no. 4743) list the following:

Kuṛux mal ‘not’, malā ‘no; not’, malnā ‘not to be (so)’, mal’ā ‘no! (when the negation falls on one single word which is being opposed to another word); no’, malkā ‘deprived of, lacking’; Malto mala ‘no, not’, mal- (past mall-) ‘to be not’. (?) Tamil -mal in negative adverbial suffix -āmal. (?) Telugu malayu ‘to appear, to happen, to be’.

This is probably a chance resemblance and should be removed from this etymology.

3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:893) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic ma* a negative particle. They note:

A monosyllabic root, but, unlike the 1st p. pron. or the accusative particle, it did not undergo denasalization in P[roto]-A[ltaic]. This may be explained by the fact that it was in most cases already incorporated into the verbal form as a suffix. It is interesting to note Mong[olian] büi*, bu* ‘neg. particle’ — which may be originally the same morpheme, but functioning as a separate word and thus subject to the rule mV > bV.

Bomhard (no. 846) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic negative/prohibitive particle ma(?)- (~ mə(?)-) ‘no, not’

291. (?) mälgi* ‘breast, udder’: Hamito-Semitic mlg* ‘breast, udder; to suck’ ~ (?) Indo-European melǵ-* ‘to milk’ ~ Uralic mälye* ‘breast, chest, cavity’. Strong.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian /-g-/* does not correspond to Proto-Indo-European /-ǵ-/* (= /-k’-/* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism). This, in itself, does not necessarily invalidate the etymology — it just means that we are dealing with different root extensions.
2. That the /-g-/* reconstructed in the Proto-Afrasian form by Illič-Svityč is a root extension is shown by the unextended root represented in Cushitic:

Proto-Afrasian mal-* ‘to draw (out), to squeeze (out), to suck (out); to give suck, to suckle, to nurse’: Semitic: Arabic malaġa (inf. malġ) ‘to suck (the mother’s breast)’, malaġa (inf. ʔimlāġ) ‘to give suck’. Arabic malaġa ‘to give suck’. Cushitic: Proto-Sam maal-* ‘to milk’ > Somali maal- ‘to milk’; Rendille maal- ‘to milk’.

Note: Orël—Stolbova (1995:392, no. 1815) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian mVlog-* ‘bosom; to suck’. However, they do not include the Cushitic forms in their etymology.

Proto-Nostratic root mal-* (~ məl-*):

(vb.) mal-* ‘to draw (out), to squeeze (out), to suck (out); to give suck, to suckle, to nurse’;

(n.) mal-a* ‘milk; breast’

292. män* ‘man, male’: Hamito-Semitic mn-* ‘male, man, person’ ~ Indo-European m/o/n-* ‘man’ ~ Uralic mänće* ‘man, person’ ~ Dravidian man* ‘husband, lord’. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form is better reconstructed as manu-s* (cf. Pokorny 1959:700 manu-s* [or monu-s*] ‘man, mankind’; Walde 1927—1932.II:266; Watkins 1985:38 man-* [also mon-] ‘man’; Gamkrelidze—Ivanov 1995.I:396 and I:661 manu- ‘person, man’; etc.). The often-repeated derivation of the Proto-Indo-European word for ‘man’, manu-s*, from men-* ‘to think’, as ‘the thinker’, is nothing more than self-flattery. More likely, especially in view of the forms from the other Nostratic daughter languages, is derivation from a root meaning ‘to lust after, to desire passionately, to copulate with, to have sexual intercourse, to beget’ (see above, no. 281).
2. The Proto-Uralic (and Proto-Dravidian) form points to /-ń-/* (= /-nʸ-/*) in Proto-Nostratic. Note: Illič-Svityč does not include Dravidian.
3. Dolgopolsky (2008:1341—1343, no. 1421) reconstructs Proto-Nostratic mañU* ‘man, male’ and (2008:1362, no. 1440) Proto-Nostratic mAnVʸV* or mAnV* ‘genitalia; to copulate’.

Bomhard (no. 874) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) manʸ-a* ‘progenitor, begetter, man, male; penis’:

Derivative of:

(vb.) manʸ-* ‘to lust after, to desire passionately, to copulate with, to have sexual intercourse, to beget’;

(n.) manʸ-a* ‘ardent desire, passion, lust’

293. m/ü/ra* ‘to be ill, to die’: Hamito-Semitic mr-* ‘to be ill’ ~ Indo-European mer-* ‘to die’ ~ Uralic m/e/ra* ‘wound, pain’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč are mentioned in Rédei (1986—1988:576) under Proto-Uralic wire* ‘blood’, though no proto-form is reconstructed. Janhunen (1977:93) reconstructs Proto-Samoyed merâjâj* ‘wound’. The Uralic forms do not really fit in semantically with the evidence from the other Nostratic daughter languages (cf. Buck 1949:304—306, §4.85 wound [sb.]: “The words for ‘wound’ are mostly from roots denoting ‘strike’ or other actions [as ‘pierce’ or ‘tear’] from which the wound resulted.”). Consequently, the Uralic forms should be removed from this etymology.
2. Hittite (3rd sg. pres.) mi-ir-zi, me-ir-zi ‘to disappear, to vanish’ shows that the Proto-Indo-European form originally meant something like ‘to perish, to disappear, to vanish’ rather than ‘to die’, as traditionally assumed. Here, I have followed Kloekhorst (2008b:577—578) in assigning the meanings ‘to disappear, to vanish’ to the Hittite verb and reinterpreted the meaning of the Proto-Indo-European verb accordingly to accommodate the revised meaning of the Hittite form. This indicates that the meaning ‘to die’ found in the cognates in the non-Anatolian Indo-European daughter languages is an innovation.

Proto-Nostratic root mar^y-* (~ mər^y-*):

(vb.) mar^y-* ‘to be weakened, to wither away, to decay; to be or become sick, to fall ill; to die (from a fatal disease), to perish’;

(n.) mar^y-a* ‘sickness, illness, fatal disease, malady, ailment; death’

294. mär'ä* ‘moisture, damp’: Hamito-Semitic mr* ‘damp; rain, reservoir’ ~ Kartvelian mar-(ei)* ‘lake, moist soil; cloud’ (< ‘damp’) ~ Indo-European mor-* ‘swamp, reservoir’ ~ Dravidian [maṛ-ai* ‘rain’] ~ Altaic mörä-* / mürä-* ‘sea, river, water’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Illič-Svityč has confused two separate Proto-Nostratic stems here:
 - A. Proto-Nostratic mar-a* ‘marsh, swamp’ (cf. Bomhard, no. 883, reconstructed based upon evidence from Indo-European, Altaic, and Eskimo);
 - B. Proto-Nostratic mor-a* ‘any body of water: sea, lake, flood, stream, pool, cistern, reservoir, basin, canal, channel’ (cf. Bomhard, no. 900, reconstructed based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, and Altaic).

Thus, this entry cannot stand as written. Nevertheless, even taking the above qualifications into consideration, I have given this entry a positive rating, inasmuch as both stems are valid Proto-Nostratic etymologies.

2. Dravidian maṛ-ai* ‘rain’ does not belong here. This eliminates the need to reconstruct Proto-Nostratic medial /-r’-/* (= /-ry-/*).

295. (?) mene* ‘to step’: Indo-European men-* ‘to trample, to step on, to crumple’ ~ Uralic mene-* ‘to go’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Lax semantics.
2. Pokorny (1959:726) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European men-* ‘to step or tread on, to trample, to press together’ (‘treten, zertreten, zusammendrücken’).
3. Rédei (1986—1988:272) reconstructs Proto-Uralic mene-* ‘to go’.

296. (?) mer’^h* ‘fat; to smear with grease/fat’: Hamito-Semitic [mr-* ‘greasy; to smear with grease/fat’] ~ Dravidian meṛ^h-* ‘to smear with grease, to coat’. Rejected.

Comment: The Dravidian forms cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here. Instead, Bomhard (no. 881) substitutes the following Dravidian (and Elamite) forms (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:416, no. 4709):

Elamo-Dravidian: Middle Elamite mi-ir-ri- ‘to rub or smear oneself with fat or oil’. Dravidian: Parji mer- ‘to rub oneself’, merpip- (merpit-), mercip-, (mercit-) ‘to rub another with the hand’; Gadba mar- ‘to rub (oil, etc.) on oneself’, marup- (marut-) ‘to rub (oil, etc.) on another’; Gondi marehtānā ‘to rub’, marahhtānā, marehtānā ‘to smear’, marehtālle ‘to apply’.

Proto-Nostratic root mar-* (~ mər-*):

- (vb.) mar-* ‘to smear, to anoint, to rub (with grease, oil, fat, ointment)’;
 (n.) mar-a* ‘grease, oil, fat, ointment, unguent’

297. metA* ‘to feel, to realize’: Indo-European med-* ‘to think over, to ponder’ ~ Altaic medä-* ‘to feel, to know’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:937—938) reconstruct Proto- Altaic m[ɨu]ti* ‘to know, to believe’.
3. According to Bomhard (no. 887), Proto-Indo-European med-* ‘to measure, to measure out, to estimate, to reckon’ (= met-* according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) is to be derived from the following Proto-Nostratic forms:

Proto-Nostratic root mat-* (~ mæt-*):

(vb.) mat-* ‘to stretch, to expand, to lengthen, to draw out, to measure out’;

(n.) mat-a* ‘measure, measurement, amount; extent, limit’

298. mEWA* ‘water, moisture’: Hamito-Semitic mw* ‘water, moisture’ ~ Indo-European meu-* ‘moist; to moisten’ ~ Altaic [mō-* ‘water’]. Strong.

Comment: Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:935—936) reconstruct Proto- Altaic mǰūri* ‘water’, based upon evidence from Tungusic, Mongolian, Japanese, and Korean. However, Dolgopolsky (2008:1305—1307, no 1382) is probably correct in rejecting the comparison of the Tungusic forms with those from Mongolian, Japanese, and Korean. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak reconstruct Proto-Tungusic mū* ‘water’ (for information on the Tungusic forms, cf. Tsintsius 1975—1977.1:548—549):

Proto-Tungus mū* ‘water’ > Evenki mū ‘water’; Lamut / Even mō ‘water’; Negidal mū ‘water’; Manchu muke ‘water; river, stream’; Jurchen mo ‘water’; Ulch mū ‘water’; Orok mū ‘water’; Nanay / Gold muke ‘water’; Oroch mū ‘water’; Udihe mu-de ‘inundation’; Solon mū ‘water’.

Proto-Nostratic root maw-* (~ məw-*):

(vb.) maw-* ‘to be wet’;

(n.) maw-a* ‘water, liquid, fluid’

299. mi* 1st person singular personal pronoun: ‘I’ (oblique mi-na*): Kartvelian me/mi ‘I’ (oblique stem: me-n-) ~ Indo-European me- ‘me’ (oblique stem: gen. sg. me-ne-) ~ Uralic mi ‘I’ (oblique stem: mi-na-) ~ Altaic bi ‘I’ (oblique stem: min-a-*). Strong.

Comment: This form was discussed under no. 289 above.

Bomhard (no. 892) treats the 1st person personal pronouns, singular and plural (inclusive), together and reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, Chukchi-Kamchatkan, Etruscan, Eskimo-Aleut, and Gilyak / Nivkh:

Proto-Nostratic first person singular mi* (~ me*) ‘I, me’, first person plural (inclusive) ma* (~ mə*) ‘we, us’

300. mi* ‘what?’: Hamito-Semitic m(j)* ‘what?, who?’ ~ Kartvelian maj ‘what?’ ~ Indo-European mo-* stem of interrogative adverbs ~ Uralic mi* ‘what?’ ~ Altaic [mi-* ‘what?’, interrogative particle]. Strong.

Comments:

1. Klimov (1964:124 and 1998:112), Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:226—227), and Fähnrich (2007:276) reconstruct Proto-Kartvelian ma-* ‘what’. Klimov (1964:135) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian mi-n-* ‘who?’, but he changes the Proto-Kartvelian reconstruction to win-* ‘who?’ in the later revised edition of his Etymological Dictionary of the Kartvelian Languages (1998:53). A similar reconstruction is given by Fähnrich—Sardshweladse (1995:135), Proto-Kartvelian wi-* ‘who?’, and Fähnrich (2007:162—163), Proto-Kartvelian wi-* ‘who?’. Taking into consideration the evidence from the other Nostratic daughter languages, it seems that Klimov’s earlier (1964) reconstruction (mi-n-* ‘who?’) is the more likely.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:958) reconstruct Proto-Altaic mǃ* interrogative root.
3. This stem only survives in relic forms in Celtic, Tocharian, and Hittite in Indo-European:

Proto-Indo-European me-/mo- interrogative and relative pronoun stem: Cornish (conjunction) ma, may ‘that’; Breton (conjunction) ma, may, Middle Breton maz (from ma+ez) ‘that’; Tocharian B mäksu (a) interrogative pronoun: ‘which?, who?’, (b) interrogative adjective: ‘which?, what?’, (c) relative pronoun: ‘which, who’, B mäkte (a) interrogative pronoun: ‘how?’, (b) comparative: ‘as’, (c) causal: ‘because’, (d) temporal: ‘as, while’, (e) final: ‘so, in order that’, (f) manner: ‘how’, A mänt, mät ‘how?’; Hittite maši(ya)- ‘how much?, how many?; as many as, as much as’, ma-a-an, ma-an (adverb and conjunction) ‘how, whether, like, (even) as, if’.

Proto-Nostratic interrogative pronoun stem mi-* (~ me-) 'who?, which?, what?', relative pronoun stem ma- (~ mə-*) 'who, which, what'

301. miñä* 'woman, female relative': Hamito-Semitic m(j)n* 'woman, female relative' ~ Uralic miñä* 'daughter/sister-in-law' ~ Dravidian miñ(t)-* 'female, woman; wanton woman'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Sasse (1982:25—26) lists Burji am-á ~ aam-á (pl. am-m-ána) 'adult woman, wife, mother' and compares it with the following forms: Sidamo am-a 'woman', Alaba am-a 'mother', and Hadiyya am-a(ti) 'mater familias'. Obviously, the Highland East Cushitic evidence cited by Illič-Svityč does not belong here.
 2. The primary meaning of the Dravidian forms seems to be 'a lewd, dissolute or licentious person (man or woman), lecher, whoremonger, debauchee, libertine, rake, etc.' Semantically, this really does not fit in with the forms from the other Nostratic daughter languages included by Illič-Svityč.
302. moL* 'to smash': Hamito-Semitic [ml-* 'smash, break, dismember'] ~ Indo-European mel-* 'to smash, to grind' ~ Uralic moL/a/* 'to break, to break up'. Strong.

Comment: Illič-Svityč confuses two separate Proto-Nostratic stems here:

Proto-Nostratic root mel-*:

(vb.) mel-* 'to rub' (> 'to rub into, to crush, to grind down; to rub smooth, to polish, to wipe; to wear out, to soften; to become worn out, weak, tired, weary');

(n.) mel-a* 'smoothness, softness; weakness'; (adj.) 'smooth, soft, tender, weak, worn out, tired, weary'

Proto-Nostratic root mol-*:

(vb.) mol-* 'to rub' (> 'to rub into, to crush, to grind down; to rub smooth, to polish, to wipe; to wear out, to soften; to become worn out, weak, tired, weary');

(n.) mol-a* ‘crumb, piece, morsel; mortar’; (adj.) ‘crushed, ground, worn out or down’

Note: It is uncertain whether the Proto-Indo-European form cited by Illič-Svityč is descended from the first (A) or the second (B) Proto-Nostratic form.

303. mu* demonstrative pronoun: ‘this, that’: Kartvelian m(a)-* demonstrative stem: ‘this, he’ ~ Uralic mū/mō ‘other’ ~ Altaic bū* (oblique mu-n*) ‘this’. Strong.

Comment: This stem is only preserved in Indo-European in relic forms in Celtic:

Welsh ýma (poetical ýman) ‘here’; Breton ama, amañ, -ma, -mañ ‘here’, (Vannetais) ama, amann, amenn ‘here’; Cornish yma, omma, -ma, -man ‘here’.

Proto-Nostratic indefinite pronoun stem ma-* (~ mǝ-), mi- (~ me-), mu- (~ mo-*) ‘one, someone, somebody, anyone, anybody; other, another’:

Note: This may originally have been a demonstrative stem (as suggested by Illič-Svityč), with three degrees of distance:

Proximate: ma-* (~ mǝ-*) ‘this’;
 Intermediate: mi-* (~ me-*) ‘that’;
 Distant: mu-* (~ mo-*) ‘that yonder’

As in the stems:

Proximate: k^ha-* (~ k^hǝ-) ‘this’; t^ha- (~ t^hǝ-*) ‘this’;
 Intermediate: k^hi-* (~ k^he-) ‘that’; t^hi- (~ t^he-*) ‘that’;
 Distant: k^hu-* (~ k^ho-) ‘that yonder’ t^hu- (~ t^ho-*) ‘that yonder’

304. muçλ* ‘to wash’: Hamito-Semitic m(w)š* ‘to wash’ ~ Indo-European mesg-* ‘to wash, to dive’ ~ Uralic muśλ, muśke- ‘to wash’ ~ Dravidian muc(c)-* ‘to wash’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. The Afrasian evidence does not belong here.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:289) reconstructs Proto-Uralic muśke-* (mośke-*) ‘to wash’.

Bomhard (no. 909) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root mus^v-* (~ mos^v-*):

(vb.) mus^v-* 'to immerse, dip, or plunge in water, to bathe';

(n.) mus^v-a* 'immersion, dip, plunge, bath'

Extended form (Indo-European and Uralic):

(vb.) mus^v-V-k'-* 'to immerse, dip, or plunge in water, to bathe';

(n.) mus^v-k'-a* 'immersion, dip, plunge, bath'

Note: Bomhard (no. 909) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European mosk'-* (secondary e-grade form: mesk'-) 'to immerse in water, to dip or plunge in water' (traditional mezg- 'to dip, to plunge' — cf. Pokorny 1959: 745—746; Watkins 2000:56) based upon the following evidence from the Indo-European daughter languages:

Sanskrit májjati 'to sink, to dive, to plunge, to perish'; Latin mergō 'to dip, to plunge into liquid, to immerse'; Lithuanian (denominative) mazgóju, mazgóti 'to wash, to wash up, to scrub'; Latvian mazgāju, mazgāt 'to wash'.

305. muč^λ* 'spoilage, shortage': Uralic muč^λ* 'shortage, fault, illness' ~ Dravidian mucc-* 'to spoil; to lose consciousness, to weaken'. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian forms (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:438, no. 4903) point to a primary meaning 'to wear out, to decay, to fall apart', from which are derived the meanings (A) 'to be or become weak, faint, tired, weary' and (B) 'to spoil'.
2. The Uralic forms (cf. Rédei 1986—1988:283) point to a general term applied to 'any illness, sickness in general' ('irgendeine Krankheit').
3. As noted by Buck (1949:302—304, §4.84 sick; sickness), "[m]any of the words [for sick] are from the notion of 'weak, without strength or power' ..., so there could be a connection between the Dravidian and Uralic forms after all, though, on the surface, the semantics are not overly compelling. No doubt, evidence from other Nostratic daughter languages would go a long way to strengthening this etymology. Here, I am giving Illič-Svityč the benefit of the doubt.
4. Not in Bomhard (this book).

306. muda* 'to end': Hamito-Semitic [md* 'to end'] ~ Dravidian mūt-* 'to end' ~ Altaic [muda-* 'end']. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:946—947) reconstruct Proto-Altaic mude* ‘soon, finally’ as the source of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.
 2. According to Haddadou (2006—2007:124), the Berber terms cited by Illič-Svityč mean (vb.) ‘to finish, to achieve; to be complete, to be finished, to be whole, etc.’ (‘finir, achever, être fini, être complet, être entier, etc.’), (n.) ‘achievement, totality, all’ (‘achèvement, totalité, tout’). Haddadou sets up a consonantal root mdw as the source of the Berber forms.
 3. The Dravidian forms cited by Illič-Svityč point to Proto-Dravidian mūt-* (short stem vowel) (vb) ‘to end, to terminate; to be completed, effected, accomplished; to be destroyed; to perish, to die; etc.’, (n.) ‘end, ruin, destruction, death, etc.’ rather than mūt-* (long stem vowel) (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:441, no. 4922).
 4. It seems that only the Afrasian (Berber) and Dravidian forms can be included here with certainty.
 5. Not in Bomhard (this book).
307. (?) muña* ‘egg’: Uralic muña* ‘egg, testicles’ ~ Dravidian [muṭṭai* ‘egg’]. Strong.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Dravidian form is to be reconstructed as muṭṭ-ay* ‘egg, testicle’.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:285—286) reconstructs Proto-Uralic muna* ‘egg, testicle’. Thus, there is no basis for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic medial -/ñ-/*.
3. Illič-Svityč also mentions the possibility that several forms from Slavic within Indo-European might be related:

Common Slavic mōdo* (< mon-d^h-*) ‘testicle’ > Russian mudo [мудо] ‘testicle’; Czech moud ‘testicle’; Polish mudo ‘testicle’ (Russian loan).

These should have, indeed, been included.

Bomhard (no. 903) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) mun-a* ‘egg, testicle’:

Extended form (Dravidian and Slavic, within Indo-European):

(n.) mun-d-a* (~ mon-d-a*) ‘egg, testicle’

308. mu(n)kA* ‘heavy, difficult’: Kartvelian mak-/mank-* ‘heavy’ ~ Dravidian mukk-* ‘to exert oneself’ ~ (?) Altaic [m/uŋ-/m/ukA-* ‘torment, suffering’]. Rejected.

Comment:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:935) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic m̥iuno* 'suffering'.

309. muri* 'to twist': Hamito-Semitic mr-* 'to rotate, to twist, to turn' ~ Uralic mur_Λ* 'to turn, to dislocate' ~ Dravidian muri-* 'to twist, to revolve, to bend', mur_Λ* 'to twist, to rotate' ~ Altaic muri-* 'to turn, to twist, to bend'. Strong.

Proto-Nostratic root mur-* (~ mor-*):
 (vb.) mur-* 'to turn, to twist, to bend';
 (n.) mur-a* 'bend, curve'

Note: The Indo-European forms cited by Bomhard either belong here or under the following Nostratic etymology (cf. Bomhard, no. 879):

Proto-Nostratic root mar-* (~ mər-*):
 (vb.) mar-* 'to turn: to overturn, to turn round, to turn over, etc.; to twist, to whirl, to roll; to bend';
 (n.) mar-a* 'the act of turning, turning over, turning round, etc.; rope, coil, string, cord'

310. mur_Λ* 'to break, to smash': Hamito-Semitic m(w)r* 'to crumble, to smash, to cut' ~ Indo-European mer-* 'to smash, to grind, to crumble' ~ Uralic mura* 'fragile, brittle; fragment' ~ Dravidian mur_Λ*/mur_Λ* 'to break, to cut' ~ Altaic [mur_Λ*/mor_Λ* 'fragile, brittle']. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Afrasian forms cited by Illič-Svityč do not belong here.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003) do not list the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč. The closest they come is (2003:929) Proto-Altaiic m̥iore* 'to hurt, to damage, to wound'. This should be substituted for the Proto-Altaiic form cited by Illič-Svityč.

Bomhard (no. 905) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic root mur-* (~ mor-*):
 (vb.) mur-* 'to crush, to break, to destroy';
 (n.) mur-a* 'break, breach, rupture, fracture'; (adj.) 'crushed, broken, destroyed, ruptured, mutilated; weakened'

311. (?) müda* ‘to think’: Hamito-Semitic m(w)d* ‘to understand, to think, to say’ ~ Indo-European meudh-* ‘to think, to say’. Rejected.

Comment: Erroneous Proto-Afrasian reconstruction. The Proto-Semitic root is mVd-*, with various “triconsonantizers” (Militarëv’s [2005] terminology). Notice also Egyptian mdw ‘to speak; speech, word, plea’ (also mwdw), mdt ‘speech, words’, mdwtj ‘speaker’, all with the same structure — root mVd-* with “triconsonantizers” */-w-/ ~ */-w/.

312. (?) maṭa* ‘worm’: Kartvelian maṭ-l-* ‘worm’ ~ Indo-European mot-* ‘worm, insect’. Rejected.

Comment: The Proto-Kartvelian form is incorrectly reconstructed. It should be reconstructed as “a nominal derivative with a prefix ma-”, thus: ma-ṭl-* ‘worm’ (cf. Klimov 1998:117; also see Fähnrich 2007:405).

313. ma/ž/ḷ* ‘light, bright, sun’: Hamito-Semitic mš* ‘sun, morning, fire’ ~ Kartvelian mz₁-e* ‘sun’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian */š/ does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian */z₁/.

314. -n* suffix of oblique form of nouns and pronouns: Kartvelian -n* suffix of oblique form of nouns and pronouns ~ Indo-European -(e)n* suffix of oblique form of nouns ~ Uralic -n* suffix of oblique form of nouns and pronouns (> suffix of genitive) ~ Dravidian -(i)ṅ* suffix of oblique form of nouns (> suffix of genitive) ~ Altaic -n* suffix of oblique form of nouns and pronouns. Possible.

Comments:

1. Greenberg reconstructs various Proto-Eurasiatic case markers/suffixes in */N/: (2000—2002.1:118—120) Personal N, (2000—2002.1:120—123) Absolutive N, (2000—2002.1:130—137) Genitive N, and (2000—2002.1:150—152) Locative N.
2. Bomhard also reconstructs various Proto-Nostratic relational markers containing */-n-/:
 - A. Direct object -na* (Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.27);
 - B. Genitive -nu* (Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.28);
 - C. Locative -ni* (Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.29); and
 - D. Dative -na* (Bomhard, vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.30).

According to Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.29), in due course, -n* became generalized as the oblique marker par excellence (cf. also Greenberg 2000—2002.1:130). Thus, Bomhard's reconstructs an earlier stage of development than Illič-Svityč, in which the individual relational markers containing */-n-/ were still functionally distinct.

315. nat/o/* 'female relative': Uralic nato* 'sister-in-law' ~ Dravidian nātt-/nata- 'sister's husband, brother's wife'. Strong.

Comment: Bomhard (no. 926) adds the following Southern Cushitic forms:

Proto-Southern Cushitic nat'a* 'woman' > Ma'a naseta 'woman'; Iraqw natsatsa 'smooth'; Dahalo nát'a 'woman'.

Bomhard (no. 926) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian (Southern Cushitic), Dravidian, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) nat'a* 'woman, female relative'

316. ne/rH/i* 'front of head, forehead': Hamito-Semitic [njr(H)* 'forehead'] ~ Uralic nēre* 'front of head, cheek, snout' ~ Dravidian nerri* 'forehead, front'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:303—304) reconstructs Proto-Uralic nere* (nēre*) 'nose, snout, beak' ('Nase, Schnabel, Schnauze, Rüssel').
2. The Proto-Afrasian form should be removed.
3. Bomhard (no. 928) adds the following Indo-European forms:

Proto-Indo-European ner-* '(the foremost) man or person, hero': Sanskrit nár- 'a man, hero (used also of gods), person; mankind, people (mostly plural)', nárya-h 'manly, strong'; Pāli nara- 'man; (pl.) people'; Avestan nar- 'man'; Greek ἀνήρ 'a man (as opposed to a woman)'; Albanian njeri 'human being, man'; Latin (Sabinian) Nērō a family name; Umbrian (acc. pl.) nerf 'elders, chief citizens'; Oscan ner 'man'; Old Irish nert 'strength'; Welsh ner 'hero'.

For the semantic development, cf. Selkup Samoyed hárnej 'the foremost person' within Uralic.

Bomhard (no. 928) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) ner-a* 'the highest, foremost, or most prominent person or thing'

317. nimi* 'name': Indo-European nōm-* 'name' ~ Uralic nime* 'name'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. For the a detailed discussion of the Proto-Indo-European word for ‘name’ and its various possible reconstructions, cf. Mallory—Adams 1997:390.
 2. The terms involved here are best seen as early borrowings (cf. Campbell—Poser 2008:253; Joki 1973:291), though the direction of the borrowing cannot be determined.
318. h₁af₁r₁* ‘young, newborn’: Hamito-Semitic [n₁f₁r* ‘young; youth’] ~ Indo-European i₁eh₁r-* ‘spring, year’ ~ Uralic h₁ōre* ‘young, newborn; spring’ ~ Dravidian h₁ā₁r-* ‘young plant; to germinate’ ~ Altaic h₁ā/r/λ* ‘young, newborn; spring’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences — Proto-Nostratic initial */h₁-/ (= */h₁y₁-/) does not become Proto-Indo-European initial */i₁-/ (= */y₁-/). Consequently, the Proto-Indo-European form should be removed.
2. According to Rédei (1986—1988:331), the vowels to be reconstructed for the Proto-Uralic (Proto-Ugrian) form are uncertain. He reconstructs h₁š₁r₁z* (h₁š₁r₁z*, h₁š₁r₁k₁z*). Décsy (1990:104) reconstructs Proto-Uralic h₁jä₁r₁ä* ‘twig, switch’, and Janhunen (1977:108) reconstructs Proto-Samoyed h₁er-*.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1013—1014) reconstruct Proto-Altaic h₁i₁ä₁r₁i* (= n₁vi₁ä₁r₁vi*) ‘man, young man’. They (2003:988—989) reconstruct a totally different stem (h₁i₁ä₁r₁[ä]*) as the ancestor of the forms from the Altaic daughter languages meaning ‘young, new, fresh; new-born; spring, summer; etc.’
4. See below (no. 331).

Bomhard has reworked this etymology and divided it into two distinct, though closely-related, Proto-Nostratic forms:

- A. Bomhard (no. 937) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root n₁af₁-* (~ n₁əf₁-*):

Extended form:

(vb.) n₁af₁-V-r-* ‘to appear, to arise, to sprout, to come into being; to grow (up), to mature’;

(n.) n₁af₁-r-a* ‘shoot, sprout, seedling’

Derivative:

(n.) n₁af₁-r-a* ‘young man, boy, youth’

- B. Bomhard (no. 938) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form based upon evidence from Afrasian and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) nʷaʕ-r-a* ‘young man, boy, youth’:

Derivative of:

(vb.) nʷaʕ-V-r-* ‘to appear, to arise, to sprout, to come into being; to grow (up), to mature’;

(n.) nʷaʕ-r-a* ‘shoot, sprout, seedling’

319. ńam* ‘to squeeze, to seize’: Indo-European iēm-* ‘to hold tightly, to bridle’ ~ Uralic ńom*-(?) ńam*- ‘to squeeze, to seize’ ~ Dravidian ńam* ‘to squeeze, to press’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Indo-European form should be removed.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1011—1012) reconstruct Proto- Altaic ńiáme* (= nʷiámi*) ‘to curse, to harm’. Bomhard (no. 939C) reinterprets the meaning of the Proto- Altaic form as ‘to crush, to destroy; to cripple, to maim; to be crushed, destroyed, weakened’, based mainly upon the evidence from Turkic. Bomhard then includes the Altaic forms in this Nostratic etymology.

Bomhard (no. 939) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Uralic (Finno-Ugrian), and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root nʷam-* (~ nʷəm-*):

(n.) nʷam-a* ‘pressing, squeezing’

320. ńara* ‘fire, blaze’: Hamito-Semitic [nr* ‘fire, blaze, sparkle’] ~ Dravidian ńara-* ‘fire, blaze’ ~ Altaic [NaRa-* ‘sun’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. The Afrasian (Semitic) material presented by Illič-Svityč is far too uncertain, though it may ultimately belong here. Orël—Stolbova (1995:410, no. 1906) reconstruct Proto-Afrasian nʷwur-* ‘light’, but this reconstruction is hardly compelling. The Semitic evidence does, indeed, point to Proto-Semitic nʷr-* ‘(vb.) to shine, to beam, to be bright; (n.) light, daylight’, extended by various “triconsonantizers”: n/w/r-, n/h/r-, n/y/r-* (cf. Militarev 2005). Comparative data from other Afrasian daughter languages is needed to confirm the original biconsonantal root structure, to determine the original initial nasal, and to be able to ascertain the Proto-Afrasian root vowel.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1028) reconstruct Proto- Altaic ńěrá* ‘day, sun, light’.

321. (Descriptive) ńāma* ‘soft’: Uralic ńamaka/ńimaka ‘soft’ ~ Altaic ńimA/ńāma ‘soft’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:314) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian ńāmz* (= nʷāmz*) ‘weak’.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:992—993) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ńūmà* ‘warm; soft, mild’. This is not a good match for the Proto-Uralic form.
322. (?) ńā/wH/a* ‘hair’: Uralic ńāwa* ‘hair, down’ ~ Dravidian [navir* ‘hair’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Uralic initial /ń-/* does not correspond to Proto-Dravidian /n-/. We would expect Proto-Dravidian /ńāw-ir-/, or the like.
 2. The Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč are not in Rédei (1986—1988).
323. (?) ńažA* ‘moist, damp’: Hamito-Semitic nq-* ‘moist; to ooze out, to splash’ ~ Uralic ńáčA/ńäčA ‘moist, damp’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian medial /-q-/* (= /-tʰ-/ ~ /-tʰʷ-/ — cf. Steiner 1977) does not correspond to Proto-Uralic medial /-č-/ ~ /-čʷ-/.

324. ńida* ‘to tie, to bind’: Indo-European nedh-* ‘to tie, to bind’ ~ Uralic ńida-* ‘to tie, to tack together, to join’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Indo-European medial /-dh-/* does not correspond to Proto-Uralic medial /-δ-/*.

325. (Descriptive) ńila* ‘slippery and moist (inner layer of rind, skin)’: Uralic ńila* ‘inner layer of rind’ ~ Altaic ńila* ‘slimy (surface)’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:318—319) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian ńila* (= nʷila*) ‘slippery and moist, slimy’.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:865) reconstruct Proto-Altaic lâlè* ‘sticky substance’ as the source of the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč.
326. ńohra* ‘moist; to flow’: Hamito-Semitic [nhr* ‘river; to flow’] ~ Uralic ńora/*ńōra/ńōru ‘moist; swamp; to flow’ ~ (?) Dravidian ńīr-* ‘moisture, water’ ~ Altaic ńōru* ‘moist; swamp; to get soaked’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Dravidian medial */-ī-/ does not correspond to either Proto-Uralic or Proto-Altaic medial */-ō-/ ~ */-ö-/ , according to the reconstructions proposed by Illič-Svityč.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:324—325) reconstructs Proto-Uralic ńor3* (= nʋor3*) ‘swamp, bog, marsh, fen’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:994) reconstruct ńjúře* (= ńjúře*) ‘to become wet, to soak’.

327. ńowda* ‘to move quickly’: Hamito-Semitic nwd-* ‘to move quickly’ ~ Indo-European ǵeudh-* ‘to move quickly, to do battle’ ~ Uralic ńowδa-* ‘to pursue, to follow’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

328. (?) ńúka* ‘to shake, to pull at’: Uralic ńúka* ‘to pull at, to jerk’ ~ Dravidian [nuk-* ‘to shake’]. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

329. ńúla-* ‘to tear out, to scrape off’: Uralic ńúlke-* ‘to skin, to tear out hair’ ~ (?) Dravidian null-* ‘to pinch, to pinch off, to tear off’ ~ Altaic ńúli-/ńúli-* ‘to strip, to tear out, to scrape off’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Dravidian medial */-l(ł)-/ does not correspond to either Proto-Uralic medial */-l-/ or Proto-Altaic medial */-l-/.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:319) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Volgaic ńilke-* (ńúlke-) (= nʋilke- [nʋúlke-*]) ‘to skin, to pull out hair’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1019—1020) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ńólo* (~ -u-) (= nʋólo*) ‘to pluck, to pick out’.

330. ńiKa* ‘neck vertebra, neck’: Uralic ńúka* ‘vertebra, joint, neck, nape of neck’ ~ Altaic ńúka-* ‘neck vertebra, neck, collar’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The Uralic forms cited by Illič-Svityč are not in Rédei (1986—1988).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:983—984) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ńúake* ‘neck, vertebra’.

331. NajR_A* ‘man, male’: Indo-European ner-* ‘man, male, male strength’ ~ Altaic [ńiar_A* ‘man, person’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

2. The Indo-European evidence was covered above (no. 316).
 3. The Altaic evidence was covered above (no. 318).
332. NA* demonstrative pronoun: Hamito-Semitic n(j)* demonstrative pronoun ~ Kartvelian -n* marker of 3rd singular subject ~ Indo-European ne-/no-* stem of demonstrative pronoun ~ Uralic nA-* stem of demonstrative pronoun ~ Dravidian nā-* demonstrative pronoun. Strong.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.18; no. 913) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic deictic particle based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic deictic particle na* (~ nə*), ni* (~ ne*) ‘this, that’

Here is the supporting evidence presented by Bomhard:

- A. Afrasian: Proto-Semitic demonstrative stem/deictic particle na*/-n* (cf. Akkadian annū ‘this’; Sabaean -n definite article; Hebrew -n deictic element). Egyptian (dem. neuter and pl.) nʒ ‘this, these’, (dem. pronoun) nw ‘this, these’; Coptic n- [N-], nen- [NEN-] plural of definite article, nai [NAI] ‘these’, nē [NH] ‘those’. Berber: Kabyle -nni ‘this, that; these, those’, -inna/-yinna ‘that, those’ (a person or thing at a distance but usually within sight). East Cushitic: Afar n-a*, Saho n-i/u*. Sasse further notes that this stem is attested in combination with k/t demonstratives in Galla / Oromo and Saho-Afar. Proto-Agaw -n-* in ʔə-n-* ‘this’ > Bilin ʔəna ‘this’, ʔən ‘the’; Xamtanga (suffix) (m.) -in ‘that’.
- B. Kartvelian: Found in verb endings in Kartvelian. Proto-Kartvelian third person singular present iterative (subjective conjugation) -n* > Old Georgian -n; Mingrelian -n; Laz -n. Proto-Kartvelian third person plural present (subjective conjugation) -en* > Georgian -en, -n; Mingrelian -an, -a, -n; Laz -an, -n.
- C. Indo-European: Proto-Indo-European demonstrative stem ne-, no-; ʔe-no-, ʔo-no- > Sanskrit (instr.) anéna, anáyā ‘this, these’; Avestan ana- ‘this’; Greek ἐνῆ ‘the last day of the month’; Latin (conj.) enim ‘indeed, truly, certainly’; Lithuanian añs, anàs ‘that, that one’; Old Church Slavic onъ ‘that, he’; Hittite an-ni-iš ‘that, yonder’; Armenian na ‘that; he, she, it; him, her’. This stem may occur in the third plural verb ending -n* as well. This was later extended by -tʰ* to form a new third plural ending -ntʰ*. Later still, this was further extended by a deictic -i* to form the so-called “primary” third plural ending -ntʰi*.
- D. Uralic: Proto-Uralic nā* (~ ne* ~ ? ni*) ‘this; this one’ > Finnish nämä/nä- (pl. of tämä/tä-) ‘these’, ne/ni- (pl. of se) ‘these, those’, näim ‘so, like this’, niin ‘so, thus’; Lapp / Saami navt, na ‘like this, in the same way as this’;

Mordvin ne (pl. of te 'this' and se 'that') 'these, those'; Zyrian / Komi na, najō 'she'; Selkup Samoyed na 'that', nyy 'thither'.

E. Altaic: Proto-Tungus third person possessive suffix -n* > Evenki -n (-in after consonants); Lamut / Even -n (-an after consonants); Udihe -ni; etc.

333. -NA* suffix of plural animate nouns: Hamito-Semitic -ān* suffix of plural animate nouns ~ Kartvelian -en/-n suffix of plural nouns (originally animate) in direct case ~ (?) Uralic -N_λ* suffix of plural nouns ~ Altaic -na/-nä suffix of plural animate nouns. Strong.

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.26) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic plural marker based upon evidence from Afrasian, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Altaic, and Chukchi-Kamchatkan:

Proto-Nostratic -nV* plural marker

334. NEga* 'to stab': Hamito-Semitic ng-* 'to stab, to pierce' ~ Indo-European neiǵh-* 'to stab, to pierce'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences.

Proto-Nostratic root nag-* (~ nəg-*):
 (vb.) nag-* 'to strike, to split, to pierce, to stab';
 (n.) nag-a* 'stroke, blow, wound'

Bomhard includes the following Indo-European evidence:

Proto-Indo-European negh-/nogh- 'to strike, to split, to pierce': Old Irish ness 'wound'; Old Church Slavic nožb 'knife', pro-noziti 'to pierce through'.

335. Nüga* 'now': Indo-European nuH-* 'now' ~ Uralic Nüka* 'now'. Strong.

Comment: Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

Bomhard (no. 936) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic particle based upon evidence from Afrasian (Egyptian/Coptic), Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic (adv.) nuw-* 'now, at present, currently'

336. (?) palA* ‘swamp’: Indo-European bolH-/pelH- ‘swamp’ ~ Altaic [pal-* ‘swamp’]. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. According to Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 21, no. 137), the Proto-Indo-European forms may be borrowings from Northwest Caucasian (Abkhaz):

Common Abkhaz p’əlhətə* ‘swamp, mud’: South Abkhaz a-p’əlhát ‘abyss, quagmire, mud’.

3. Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 21, no. 137) cites the following Indo-European forms as possible borrowings from Northwest Caucasian:

(?) Illyrian balta* ‘swamp’ (> Albanian baltë ‘mud, clay, earth; swamp, marsh’, Balti ‘mud’, baltomë ‘mud, filth’; Romanian baltă ‘swamp’; Modern Greek βάλτος ‘swamp’); Old Church Slavic blato (< bolto-*) ‘quagmire, swamp’; Russian bolóto [болото] ‘marsh, bog, swamp’; Serbo-Croatian blàto ‘mud, swampy terrain’; Czech bláto ‘mud’; Bulgarian bláto ‘mud, swamp’; Lithuanian balà ‘swamp’.

Note: According to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism, the sound traditionally reconstructed as /b/* was the bilabial ejective /p’/*.

337. pelHi* ‘to shake, to fear’: Indo-European pelH-/pleH- ‘to shake, to fear’ ~ Uralic pele-* ‘to fear’ ~ (?) Dravidian [pɪɻA-* ‘to shake, to fear’] ~ Altaic pēli-* ‘to be frightened’. Possible.

Comments:

1. The Proto-Dravidian form should be removed. Proto-Dravidian medial /-ɻ-/* does not correspond to medial /-l-/* in the other Nostratic daughter languages.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:370) reconstructs Proto-Uralic pele-* ‘to fear, to be afraid’.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:238—239) include the Altaic forms cited by Illič-Svityč under Proto-Altaic belV* ‘hysterics, panic, mourning’. Therefore, the Altaic evidence should be removed from this etymology.

Proto-Nostratic root p^hel-*:

(vb.) p^hel-* ‘to tremble, to shake; to be frightened, fearful, afraid’;

(n.) p^hel-a* ‘fright, fear’

338. (?) puřčλ(gλ)/pülčλ(gλ) ‘flea’: Hamito-Semitic p₁rgt*/brgt*/(?) p₁lgt* ‘mosquito, flea’ ~ Indo-European bhlus-/plus- ‘flea’ ~ Altaic püragä*/bürägä*/(?) pürčä* ‘flea’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. There is even a single fragment of this etymology that can be salvaged.

339. (Descriptive) p^hür/a* ‘to tear, to break, to split’: Hamito-Semitic p/r-* ‘to split, to destroy, to cut’ ~ Kartvelian p₁r-eç-/p₁r-iç- ‘to tear’ ~ Indo-European (s)per-* ‘to tear, to break’ ~ Uralic pärä-* ‘to break’ (derived form pärek* ‘broken off piece’) ~ Dravidian pari-/pari- ‘to tear, to break, to split’ ~ Altaic p^hör’ül*/p^hür’ü-* ‘to tear, to smash, to grind’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Rédei (1986—1988:366) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian päre* ‘small piece, bit, fragment’.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1158) reconstruct Proto-Altaic p^höře* (~ p^hěro*) (= p^hörye [~ p^hěryo*]) ‘to screw, to carve, to scratch’. This should be removed from this entry — the vowels do not match those from the other Nostratic daughter languages.
3. Removing the Altaic forms means that there is no basis for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic medial */-r’-/ (= */-ry-/).

Proto-Nostratic root p^har-* (~ p^hər-*):

(vb.) p^har-* ‘to separate, to divide, to break (apart)’;

(n.) p^har-a* ‘part, portion, share’

340. (Descriptive) p^hisλ* ‘to splash’: Kartvelian ps-* ‘to urinate’ ~ Uralic piSa-* ‘to drip, to drizzle’ ~ Dravidian picλ* ‘to drizzle, to rain’ ~ Altaic p^hisü-/p^hüsü- ‘to splash’. Weak.

Comment: This is one of the few times that an entry is labelled “descriptive” (дескрипт.) (onomatopoeitic) by Illič-Svityč where the label is actually warranted. Even though this is probably a valid etymology in one form or another, it cannot be used to establish genetic relationship.

341. p^hořga*/p^hodga* ‘hip’: Hamito-Semitic pλxd*/pλxd*/xpd* (< pλdx-/pλdx- with metathesis) ‘hip’ ~ Indo-European bhe/dh-* ‘hip’ ~ Uralic pōčka* ‘hip, calf, meaty bulge’. Doubtful correspondences in Kartvelian and Altaic. Rejected.

Comment: Impossible sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

342. (?) P/ä/Hja* ‘pain’: Indo-European pehi-* ‘to cause pain, to scold’ ~ Altaic [Pöjä* ‘wound’]. Weak.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. Lax semantics.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1165) reconstruct Proto-Altaic p’oje* (~ -ju-, -jo-, -i) (= p^hoje*) ‘pain, sore’.
 3. Pokorny (1959:792—793) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European pē(i)-, pī- ‘to hurt, to scold, to shame’.
343. qoṭi* ‘to ignite; fire’: Hamito-Semitic xt-/xt-* ‘to ignite, to blaze up’ ~ Indo-European Hēt-* ‘fire, hearth’ ~ (?) Dravidian [ota* ‘to kindle’] ~ Altaic ōti* ‘spark, fire’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
 2. Proto-Indo-European Hēt-* ‘fire, hearth’ cannot possibly come from Proto-Nostratic qoṭi* ‘to ignite; fire’.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1067) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ōt’a* (~ -t-) (= ō^ha*) ‘fire; hot, warm’. Proto-Altaic medial /-t^h-/* (= /-t^h-/) points to Proto-Nostratic medial /-t^h-/. Proto-Nostratic initial /q-/* does not become Proto-Altaic initial /Ø-/*.
 4. Proto-Nostratic initial /q-/* does not become Proto-Dravidian initial /Ø-/*.
344. qura* ‘edge, tip; to cut’: Hamito-Semitic qwr* ‘to cut, to dig; opening’ ~ Kartvelian qwer-* ‘to castrate’ ~ Uralic kur^h* ‘knife’ ~ Dravidian [kūr* ‘sharp’] ~ Altaic [Kur-ča* ‘sharp’]. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

As a partial alternative proposal to Illič-Svityč’s etymology, Bomhard (no. 519) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root k^{wh}ar-* (~ k^{wh}ər-*):

(n.) k^{wh}ar-a* ‘piece cut off; knife’

Derivatives:

- (vb.) k^whar-* 'to cut a groove, to hollow out, to dig';
 (n.) k^whar-a* 'cut, hole, hollow, digging, excavation, pit, groove, trench'
 (vb.) k^whar-* 'to cut short, to reduce, to decrease, to diminish, to lessen';
 (n.) k^whar-a* 'shortness'; (adj.) 'short'

Note: Bomhard includes Proto-Uralic kur3* 'knife' (cf. Rédei 1986—1988:218—219) in his proposal but not the other forms included by Illič-Svityč.

345. (?) q̣_Λ particle of collective meaning: Kartvelian [-qe marker of plural of 2nd/3rd person oblique object] ~ (?) Indo-European *-*k*_Λ suffix of collective ~ Uralic *-k suffix of plural (in pronominal markers of 1st and 2nd plural) ~ Dravidian *-*k(k)*_Λ suffix of noun plural. Possible.

Comment: Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. There is nothing in the data cited from the Nostratic daughter languages to justify reconstructing a Proto-Nostratic initial postvelar ejective */q̣-/ (= */q'-/).

Bomhard (vol. 1, Chapter 16, §16.23) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic plural marker based upon evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Uralic, Gilyak / Nivkh, and Eskimo:

Proto-Nostratic plural *-k^hu

346. (?) rEɣ*_Λ 'daylight': Hamito-Semitic rjɣ* 'sun, daylight' ~ Kartvelian [r/h/* 'to dawn, to shine']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Not listed in Klimov (1998). Svan (Upper Bal) has the following forms: lirhāl 'to dawn', lirhe 'to light something; to be lit up; to dawn', lirhi 'to stay awake during the night', rəhi 'clear (light)', rəhijburi (idiomatic) 'life' (that is, 'light and dark').

347. SΛΛ* 'favorable': Hamito-Semitic šl-* 'favorable, fortunate' ~ Indo-European selh-/sleh- 'favorable'. Rejected.

Proto-Nostratic root sʷol-*:

- (vb.) sʷol-* 'to be safe, well, sound';

(n.) svol-a* ‘safety; health, welfare’; (adj.) ‘safe, well, sound’

348. šehr'a* ‘to be awake’: Hamito-Semitic [šhr* ‘to be awake’] ~ Indo-European se/Hr/-* ‘to guard (vigilantly)’ ~ Uralic [š/era* ‘to be awake’] ~ Altaic Ser'ä* ‘to be awake, to awaken, to notice’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

349. (Descriptive) taph(a)* ‘to beat’: Hamito-Semitic tp₁h* ‘to beat, to trample, to break’ ~ Indo-European tep-* ‘to beat, to crush’ ~ Uralic tappa-* ‘to beat, to trample, to kick’ ~ Dravidian tabb-* ‘to beat’ ~ Altaic t'api-* ‘to beat, to hammer’ / t'äpi-* ‘to beat, to kick’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Proto-Dravidian tabb-* is not a valid reconstruction. Instead, it should be Proto-Dravidian tapp-* ‘to strike, to beat, to kill, etc.’ (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984: 367, no. 3075).
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1355—1356) reconstruct Proto-Altaic tāp'V* (= tāp^hV*) ‘to stamp, to press’.
4. Illič-Svityč has confused two separate Proto-Nostratic stems here.

Bomhard reconstructs two distinct Proto-Nostratic forms as follows:

- A. Bomhard (no. 193) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root thap^h-* (~ thəp^h-*):

(vb.) thap^h-* ‘to strike, to knock, to hit, to beat, to pound; to trample’;

(n.) thap^h-a* ‘stroke, slap, blow, hit’

- B. Bomhard (no. 228) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms based upon evidence from Afrasian, Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root t'ap^h-* (~ t'əp^h-*):

(vb.) t'ap^h-* ‘to strike, to beat, to pound’;

(n.) t'ap^h-a* ‘stroke, blow’

350. wola* ‘big’: (?) Afrasian w/l/-* ‘big’ ~ Indo-European uel-* ‘big’ ~ Uralic wola* ‘many, surplus’ ~ Dravidian val* ‘big, strong’ ~ Altaic ola* ‘many’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1494) reconstruct Proto-Altaic ulu* (~ -o) 'big, many; good'.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:543—544) reconstructs Proto-Uralic ulʒ* (-jʒ) 'many, big; very'.

Proto-Nostratic root wal-* (~ wəl-*):

(vb.) wal-* 'to be or become strong';

(n.) wal-a* 'strength, power'

Note: The revised Proto-Uralic form may be related to the revised Proto-Altaic form (though not to the Afrasian, Indo-European, and Dravidian forms). More research is needed.

351. woʎa* 'to get, to obtain, to overtake': Uralic wotta-* 'to bag game, to overtake (when hunting)' ~ Dravidian ott-* 'to extract, to bring'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. There is not a shred of evidence, based upon the forms cited from the Nostratic daughter languages, to justify reconstructing a medial dental ejective -/t̚-/* (= -/tʰ-/*) in Proto-Nostratic.
2. Lax semantics.

352. zap'a* 'to take into one's hands, to hold': Indo-European sep-* 'to hold, to be occupied with something' ~ Altaic žapa-* 'to take into one's hands, to make, to arrange'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1528) reconstruct Proto-Altaic žapʷu* (= žapʰu*) 'to hold, to connect'.
353. ž/a/ñʌ* 'fetus, fruit, pregnancy, descendants': Hamito-Semitic dn-* 'to get pregnant; descendants; brother, sister' ~ (?) Kartvelian zɪm-a* 'brother' ~ Dravidian can-ai* 'fetus, pregnancy'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian initial /d̚-/* (= /t̚ʰ-/* ~ /tʰ-/* — cf. Steiner 1977) does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian initial /zɪ-/* or Proto-Dravidian initial /c-/*.

2. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.

SUMMARY / CONCLUSIONS

Based upon this review, it should be clear that Illič-Svityč's work is riddled with faulty sound correspondences ("non-corresponding sound correspondences" [cf. Campbell—Poser 2008:247—248]), rather lax semantics ("semantically non-equivalent forms" [cf. Campbell—Poser 2008:249, §9.4.1.6]), and impossible Proto-Nostratic reconstructions ("typological problems" [cf. Campbell—Poser 2008:250, §9.4.1.8]). It is also apparent that Illič-Svityč had a rather superficial understanding of Afrasian, at best, though his handling of the Uralic and Altaic data was much better. Even here, however, he has not escaped criticism (cf. especially Campbell—Poser 2008:243—264, §9.4; to be fair, see here also the reviews of Campbell—Poser [2008] by George Starostin [2009] and Václav Blažek [2010]). Given the time period during which he worked (mid-1960s), Illič-Svityč's handling of the Afrasian data he cites is understandable and forgivable, considering the state of the field at the time. There have been tremendous advances in Afrasian scholarship over the past fifty years, much of it by Russian scholars. Unlike Campbell—Poser (2008:249, §9.4.1.5), however, I do not fault "short forms" when pronouns and particles are involved. Though I mostly agree with Campbell—Poser's (2008:246—247) criticism of Illič-Svityč's inclusion of so-called "descriptive" forms ("onomatopoetic, affective, expressive, ideophonic, or sound-symbolic forms"), Illič-Svityč's use of the label "descriptive" (дескрипт.) often seems rather arbitrary to me, and I would remove the label from most of the forms where it occurs. Even though the inclusion of such forms, when correctly identified as such, cannot be used to establish genetic relationship, I do not have any problem including such forms whenever the cumulative evidence from the daughter languages shows that they were part of the primordial vocabulary. But, to repeat and re-emphasize, onomatopoeia, nursery words, chance resemblances, and the like must never be used as evidence to try to establish a genetic relationship among languages — reconstruction, yes; evidence, no.

Another point must be emphasized, since it has characterized Russian scholarship on Nostratic from the beginning right up to the present day (cf., for example, Starostin—Kassian—Zhivlov 2015). Illič-Svityč (as well as Dolgopolsky) gives far too much weight to Uralic. To anyone who has seriously studied the subject, it is blatantly obvious that Proto-Uralic is not the most conservative Nostratic daughter language. Rather, it belongs, as Joseph Greenberg (2000—2002) tried to show, to the Eurasiatic sub-branch of Nostratic. Consequently, attempts to reconstruct Proto-Nostratic based upon Proto-Uralic can only lead to gravely flawed results. No doubt, the overreliance on Uralic is the reason that several contemporary Russian scholars are confused about whether Afrasian should or should not be included within the Nostratic macrofamily. Afrasian is most definitely a branch of Nostratic — indeed, the oldest branch —, as originally shown by Illič-Svityč and confirmed by the work of Dolgopolsky and Bomhard.

As an aside, yet another problem I see with contemporary Russian scholarship on distant linguistic relationship is the careless use of lexicostatistics, Swadesh lists, and glottochronology — to his credit, Illič-Svityč did not use these methodologies. For example, a careful reading of a recent (2015) article published in the Journal of Indo-European Studies by the Russian scholars George Starostin, Alexei Kassian, and Mikhail Zhivlov (all highly competent linguists in their own right) entitled “Proto-Indo-European-Uralic Comparison from the Probabilistic Point of View” unambiguously exposes the shortcomings of these methodologies, namely, assumptions based upon assumptions based upon assumptions masquerading as methodological rigor (note here especially Roger Blench’s 2014 paper “Language Levelling Challenges All Mathematical Methods of Language Classification” available for free download on academia.edu; note also the comments on the 2015 paper by Starostin—Kassian—Zhivlov by Don Ringe, Brett Kessler, and Petri Kallio). Typically, the authors try to conceal the shortcomings of these methodologies through the use of highly specialized technical jargon, statistics, and sophisticated logic. However, one of these scholars inadvertently disclosed the legerdemain going on by freely admitting in print that he kept changing the input data used in one of his models until he achieved the desired results. The scientific name for this kind of activity is “fudging”. These tactics notwithstanding, the use of lexicostatistics, glottochronology, and Swadesh lists falls far short of what might be considered as reasonable standards of scientific rigor and precision. As is to be expected, the continued use of discredited methodologies does not inspire confidence in the results achieved or the conclusions reached. Perhaps, Roy Andrew Miller (1980:86) said it best:

For the historical linguist, the entire proposition of “basic vocabulary,” including both the idea that some words in a language are, or should be, more resistant to historical change than others, and the idea that certain kinds of words are of special importance in helping to demonstrate a genetic relationship of languages in a convincing fashion, is unsupported, undemonstrable, and unscientific...

The damage that has been done to historical linguistics because of the mistaken application of the essentially erroneous thesis of “basic vocabulary,” particularly when some scholars have attempted to employ it for quasi-statistical purposes (“glottochronology” or “lexicostatistics”), has been immense.

A recent issue of Diachronica was devoted to a discussion of these methodologies: Søren Wichmann and Anthony Grant (eds.), Quantitative Approaches to Linguistic Diversity: Commemorating the Centenary of the Birth of Morris Swadesh. (= Diachronica XXVII/2, 2010.) Amsterdam and Philadelphia, PA: John Benjamins. In closing, we may note that these methodologies are only as good as the assumptions upon which they are based — astonishingly, those assumptions keep changing as scholars struggle to refine these methodologies in response to criticisms and to correct inherent flaws. Sadly, the flaws are both too numerous and too deep-rooted to be overcome, some heroic efforts in that direction notwithstanding (cf. George Starostin 2010). Furthermore, the results achieved by the use of these methodologies are dependent upon the quality of the input data. In this regard, the Global Lexicostatistical Database (GLD) initiated by the late Russian scholar Sergej Starostin may be mentioned. The quality of the data included in this database is notoriously unreliable, and several scholars have commented on this and urged extreme caution in using this resource.

At the beginning of this review, I laid out the criteria for evaluation and proposed a scale consisting of four categories: “strong”, “possible”, “weak”, and “rejected”. Now, we can summarize our findings in terms of those categories, applied to the 353 entries in the first two volumes of Illič-Svityč’s Nostratic dictionary:

Category	Number of Items	Percentage
Strong	85	24%
Possible	86	24%
Weak	28	8%
Rejected	154	44%
Totals	353	100%

My overall assessment is that we should truthfully acknowledge and graciously abandon what Illič-Svityč got wrong in his Nostratic dictionary, we should be thankful for what he got right, and we should build on the foundation of what he got right. The valid entries in Illič-Svityč’s dictionary are more than what we had before, and they provide a good basis for further research.

POSTSCRIPT

Due to highest respect and admiration I have for the body of work on Nostratic produced by Vladislav Markovič Illič-Svityč, this is not a review that I really wanted to prepare, and I have resisted the temptation to do so for many, many years. However, for over 35 years, I have stood (mostly) silently by and read and listened to comments by a small clique of Russian colleagues on how great (unassailable/sacrosanct) Illič-Svityč’s version of Nostratic is and how inferior my own endeavors in the field are in comparison. Saying that something is so does not make it so, no matter how many times it is repeated. As noted by Anatole France: “If fifty million people believe a foolish thing, it is still a foolish thing”. This arrogance and condescending attitude on the part of the Russians is not only baseless, it continues unabated to the present day (June 2020). Part of the adulation of Illič-Svityč's work is due to the "Slava Cult" mentioned at the beginning of this Appendix. Well, enough is enough!

To illustrate the kind of behavior I am talking about here, I would like to mention a single example — a review (in both Russian and English) written in 1987 by the late Eugene Helimski of my 1984 book Toward Proto-Nostratic. I have chosen this example because it is still being cited by Russian scholars, who have claimed that I have ignored the concerns raised by the Helimski in my subsequent work. My answer to that criticism is that they are correct — I have, indeed, intentionally ignored Helimski's criticism. The reason for this is that I disagreed with most of Helimski's review when it was published, and I still do. Some of the criticisms raised by Helimski fall into the category of "straw man arguments". To quote Wikipedia:

A straw man is a common form of argument and is an informal fallacy based on giving the impression of refuting an opponent's argument, while actually refuting an argument that was not advanced by that opponent. One who engages in this fallacy is said to be 'attacking a straw man'.

Another problem with Helimski's review is "cherry picking". Again, quoting Wikipedia:

Cherry picking, suppressing evidence, or the fallacy of incomplete evidence is the act of pointing to individual cases or data that seem to confirm a particular position, while ignoring a significant portion of related cases or data that may contradict that position. It is a kind of fallacy of selective attention, the most common example of which is the confirmation bias. Cherry picking may be committed intentionally or unintentionally. This fallacy is a major problem in public debate.

That Helimski has engaged in "cherry picking" is so obvious that it almost does not even need to be pointed out. In those (relatively few) cases where I felt Helimski raised legitimate concerns, I have, as a matter of fact, made the appropriate corrections in subsequent works. For what it is worth, I must say that Helimski (and several others, who will remain unnamed) is actually quite adept at subtly misrepresenting what I have written and then attacking the misrepresentation as though it were an accurate account of my views. This kind of deliberate misrepresentation of my work on the part of contemporary Russian scholars (one in particular) is still going on (2020), and the time is long overdue to start calling them out on their dishonesty.

I have prepared this review to show that the work of Illič-Svityč on Nostratic is neither as flawed (total rejection) as his critics have claimed, on the one hand, nor as flawless (unqualified acceptance) as his supporters have claimed, on the other hand. Illič-Svityč was a careful and knowledgeable scholar, and he did the best he could with what was available to him at the time. At its best, his work was of the highest quality. However, his research on Nostratic was a pioneering effort, and, as such, it has both its strengths and its weaknesses, the latter becoming increasingly more pronounced and more apparent with the passage of time. I am hoping that this review will help give a more objective and balanced appreciation of the contribution that Illič-Svityč made to Nostratic studies and that it will mitigate the reprehensible arrogance and condescending attitude on the part of the Russians.

A CRITICAL REVIEW OF THE VOLUME 3 OF:

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

Appendix 1 contains a critical review of volumes 1 and 2 of Vladislav Markovič Illič-Svityč's Опыт сравнения ностратических языков (семитохамитский, картвельский, индоевропейский, уральский, дравидийский, алтайский) [An Attempt at a Comparison of the Nostratic Languages (Hamito-Semitic, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Dravidian, Altaic)] (1971—1984). Now, I would like to turn my attention to the third, and final, volume of this work. The Introductory Remarks included in my review of the first two volumes should also be consulted.

I have purposely chosen to review this volume separately. The reason for this is that the first two volumes were either prepared by Illič-Svityč himself or by a team of scholars working from Illič-Svityč's notes, while the third volume forms an independent, later (1984) adjunct to the first two volumes (1971 and 1976). It was not based upon Illič-Svityč's notes but was prepared instead by a group of Russian scholars, under the general editorship of Vladimir A. Dybo. The Proto-Nostratic reconstructions used by the scholars who prepared this volume still follow Illič-Svityč's system. Nonetheless, the supporting evidence is far richer, and more recent publications are cited. I will be referring to "the authors" throughout this review, inasmuch as Illič-Svityč did not prepare this volume.

CRITERIA FOR EVALUATION

I will use the same scale here that I used in my review of Dolgopolsky's Nostratic Dictionary and in my review of the first two volumes of Illič-Svityč's Опыт сравнения ностратических языков (семитохамитский, картвельский, индоевропейский, уральский, дравидийский, алтайский) [An Attempt at a Comparison of the Nostratic Languages (Hamito-Semitic, Kartvelian, Indo-European, Uralic, Dravidian, Altaic)]:

Strong:	This is a solid etymology, without major problems.
Possible:	This is a plausible etymology, but there are problem areas. Quite often, one of the putative cognates in the daughter languages (at the macro level, not individual cited forms) does not belong or is questionable, while the remaining cognates do, indeed, fit together quite well. There may also be minor problems with the semantics or with the phonology, but these can usually be explained in terms of widely-attested semantic shifts or phonological processes.
Weak:	There are major problems with this etymology, usually either with the semantics or the phonology or with the quality or quantity of the supporting material from the daughter languages. Nonetheless, this etymology is not to be rejected outright. Typically, there are parts that can be salvaged, though the etymology cannot stand as written.
Rejected:	There are so many problems with this etymology that it must be fully disqualified. Some of these etymologies may involve borrowings.

Each entry was evaluated exclusively in terms of the material cited from the daughter languages to determine the extent to which viable comparisons were proposed, that is to say, whether they had a chance of being true cognates or whether they were merely specious. Moreover, the validity of the reconstructed forms posited by the authors was also evaluated. Finally, the etymologies were further judged both in terms of the sound correspondences proposed by Illič-Svityč (and extracted and formatted into tables by Vladimir Dybo) and the alternative set proposed by Bomhard (this book). As noted in my review of the first two volumes, some of the sound laws proposed by Illič-Svityč are simply wrong.

In evaluating the individual etymologies, the vowels were given as much weight as the consonants. If there was not a perfect or nearly perfect match in both, or if the authors failed to give a convincing explanation for exceptions to the expected correspondences, the etymology was rejected, even if the semantics were solid. In like manner, even though the correspondences may have been flawless, an etymology was rejected or evaluated as “weak” if the semantics were not perfect or nearly perfect. In spite of all of these conditions, whenever there were uncertainties, the authors of the present volume were always given the benefit of the doubt. I also tried to be mindful that the authors based their proposals on the best material that was available to them at the time (1984). Needless to say, there have been many advances since then in each of the languages/language families which the authors (and Illič-Svityč) included in their version of Nostratic. Newer works are cited in this review where appropriate.

ILLIČ-SVITYČ'S NOSTRATIC DICTIONARY: VOLUME 3

Illič-Svityč's transcription has been retained (note: the authors use Illič-Svityč's symbol /Λ/ to indicate a vowel of indeterminate quality). I have mostly used Mark Kaiser's English translations from the original Russian. Where they exist, I provide references to the alternative Nostratic etymologies I have proposed (cf. Bomhard, this book) but not to those proposed by Dolgopolsky, unless relevant to the discussion, inasmuch as he, the authors of the present volume, and Illič-Svityč follow essentially the same system and inasmuch as I have already evaluated Dolgopolsky's work. Finally, I have retained the older term "Hamito-Semitic" as the translation for "семитохамитский" when citing Illič-Svityč's work, as well as the work of the authors of the present volume, inasmuch as this is the term they preferred. Elsewhere, I use "Afrasian" in this review.

354. luŋe* 'snow': Uralic luŋe* 'snow' ~ Altaic [luŋä* 'wet snow']. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:253—254) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Permian lume* 'snow'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:891) reconstruct Proto-Altaic lūni* (~ -e) (= lūnʷi*) 'snow'.

355. maHj/e/* 'to rock, to wave': Indo-European meh(i)-* 'to rock, to shake, to wave, to nod', (figuratively) 'to lure, to summon, to show' ~ Dravidian maya 'to sway, to reel (physically and emotionally)' ~ Altaic maji* 'to rock, to shake, to sway, to bend, to wave'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. The Altaic and Dravidian vowels do not match (see comment 2).
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:907) reconstruct Proto-Altaic meju* 'to shake, to sway'.
3. Rix (2001:425) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European meh₂-* 'to give a sign'. Rix includes Lithuanian móju, móti 'to wink; to give (or make) a sign; to wave; to beckon'. Derksen (2015:324) also reconstructs Proto-Indo-European meh₂-* and mentions possible Slavic and Germanic cognates, while Pokorny (1959:693) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European mā-* 'to wave the hand, to beckon'. Thus, in Proto-Indo-European, */-i-/ is an extension and is not part of the root.

356. maHjΛ* 'to lose strength, to weaken, to disappear, to perish': Indo-European meHī-* (> mā(i)-* or mō(i)-) 'to tire' ~ Dravidian mājΛ- 'to disappear, to perish, to be finished, to die; to destroy, to finish' ~ Altaic maja*- 'to weaken, to be lost'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. The Dravidian forms really do not fit that well here semantically (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:428, no. 4814).
 2. Pokorny (1959:746) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European mō-* 'to become tired', while Rix (2001:425) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European meh₃-* 'to tire, to make tired'. As in the preceding entry, */-j-/ is an extension and is not part of the root in Proto-Indo-European.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:894) reconstruct Proto-Altaic maja* 'to miss, to fail; bad luck' as the ancestor of the Altaic forms cited by the authors.
357. (?) mena* 'to miss, to pass by; to be futile, in vain; to be reckless' ~ Indo-European men-t-/m_h-t- 'to be futile, useless, false; to lie' ~ Uralic mentä* 'to pass by, to miss the mark, to be mistaken' ~ Altaic mun-u-* 'to get lost; to go insane', men-* 'to become blunt, dull; to become cloudy (consciousness)', mej-de-* 'to be shocked, lost; to become confused'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.
 2. De Vaan (2008:372) derives Latin mentiōr 'to lie, to utter that which is not true; to deceive, to mislead' from Proto-Indo-European mn-ti-* 'thought, mind', as follows: "The meaning 'to lie' derives from a semantic change 'to have second thoughts, to be inventive' > 'to conjure up, to lie'." See also Ernout—Meillet (1985:396—397) (denominative from mēns, mentis 'mind, opinion') and Walde—Hofmann (1965—1972.II:68—69) (under mendāx), from Proto-Indo-European m_h-tis* 'thought, mind'. None of the traditional Latin etymological dictionaries appear to support the derivation of the Latin term proposed by the authors.
 3. Three different Proto-Altaic forms are confused here: (A) mūnu* 'wrong, mad, uneasy' (cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003:953); (B) mīāni* 'to be confused, to hesitate' (cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak 2003:922—923); and (C) Proto-Altaic mēja* 'to run, to trot' (> Proto-Mongolian mejde-* 'to hurry, to scurry') (cf. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:914).
 4. Rédei (1986—1988:272—273) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian mentä-* 'to be missing, wanting; to lack; to make a mistake, error, blunder'.
358. (?) munE* 'shortage, defect, deformity': Indo-European men-d-* 'defect, shortage, deformity' ~ Altaic munE* 'shortcoming, defect, shortage'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:952) reconstruct Proto-Altaic mùne* ‘defect, lack’.
 2. De Vaan (2008:372) reconstructs Proto-Italo-Celtic m(e)nd^h-o-* as the ancestor of Latin mendum ‘physical blemish or fault, error’; Old Irish mind ‘mark, sign’, mennar ‘blemish’. Matasović (2009:265, 265—266) reconstructs Proto-Celtic mendu-* ‘mark, sign’.
 3. The following Anatolian cognates can be added to the Indo-European evidence: Hittite mant- ‘something harming’ (nom. sg. ma-an-za (hapax legomenon), (adj.) mantalli- ‘venomous (?)’, ‘poisonous (?)’, ‘rancorous (?)’ (note: this may be of Luwian origin); Lycian mēte ‘harm’; Lydian mētlī ‘something negative’ (cf. Kloekhorst 2008:555; Puhvel 1984— .6:59—61). Kloekhorst tentatively derives the Anatolian forms from Proto-Indo-European mond-* (?), and this is also mentioned by Puhvel as a possibility, both citing work by Rieken.
 4. The meaning of the Proto-Indo-European form is uncertain. Nonetheless, in view of the Anatolian data, we may venture a guess that the original meaning may have been something like ‘harm, injury, wound’ (cf. Buck 1949:1183—1184, §16.76 fault, guilt — assuming semantic development as in Latin noxā, noxiā ‘harm, injury’, hence also ‘fault, offense, guilt’). There is enough semantic overlap among the forms cited by Buck to accommodate the Altaic semantic developments as well. Consequently, I am giving the authors the benefit of the doubt here.
359. ñajgu-* ‘to bow, to bend, to hand’: Indo-European kneig^uh-* ‘to bow, to bend’ ~ Uralic ñ/ik/u/* (< ñajgu-* ?) ‘to bow, to bend’ ~ Altaic ñajgu-* ‘to bend, to hang, to droop, to rock’. Rejected.

Comment:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
 2. Rédei (1986—1988:317—318) reconstructs Proto-Uralic ñik₃-* (= n^vik₃-) ‘to bend down, to be bent down’. Janhunen (1977:101) reconstructs Proto-Samoyed ñikâ- ‘to bend (the head), to nod (the head)’.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:872) reconstruct Proto-Altaic leña* (= len^va*) ‘to incline, to sway, to shake’ as the ancestor of the Altaic forms cited by the authors.
360. Nuq/üi/* ‘to bend, to rock, to lower’: Hamito-Semitic nwx* ‘to bend, to lower, to lay’ ~ Kartvelian nq^w* ‘to bring down, to overturn’ ~ Indo-European neuH-* ‘to bend, to bow, to rock’ ~ (?) Dravidian [nūka* ‘to bend, to bow’] ~ Altaic nugu/nükü ‘to bend, to bow’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.

2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:879) reconstruct Proto-Altaic lúke* ‘to bend, to bow’ as the ancestor of the Altaic forms cited by the authors.
 3. The Proto-Indo-European forms does not belong here.
 4. Proto-Afrasian /x/* (= /ħ/* in traditional transcription) does not correspond to Proto-Dravidian /k/*.
361. pal'qa* ‘foot’: Kartvelian p₁erq-* (> perq-/berq-) ‘leg, foot, step’ ~ Uralic p/ä/l'kä* ‘foot’ ~ Altaic p/al'ka* ‘leg, foot, step’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences: Proto-Kartvelian medial /-r-/* does not correspond to either Proto-Uralic medial /-l'-/* (= /-ly-/) or Proto-Altaic medial /-l'-/ (= /-ly-/*).
 2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:284—285) reconstruct Proto-Altaic àlak'u* (= àlak^hu*) ‘to walk, to step’ as the ancestor of the Altaic forms cited by the authors.
362. p/a/r/ä* ‘(finger) nail’: Hamito-Semitic p₁r-, p₁r-s- ‘nail, finger’ ~ Kartvelian p₁c/xa* ‘nail, claw’ ~ (?) Indo-European per-, perst- ‘finger’ ~ (?) Dravidian ver-ał* (< p₁er-ał*) ‘finger’ ~ Altaic para-(ŋa)/p'ärä-(ŋä) (< pare-(ŋa)*) ‘thumb’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
 2. Ad hoc sound law — Proto-Dravidian initial /v-/* does not come from Proto-Nostratic initial /p-/* ~ p₁-/* (cf. Burrow—Emeneau 1984:490, no. 5409). Krishnamurti (2003:483) reconstructs Proto-Dravidian wir-ał* ‘finger’.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1138) reconstruct Proto-Altaic p'erV* (= p^herV*) ‘thumb’. Note especially the discussion of the developments in the individual Altaic daughter languages.
 4. Several different stems are confused and/or improperly analyzed in the Afrasian material cited by the authors.
 5. Wodtko—Irslinger—Schneider (2008:552) reconstruct a compound form, that is, Proto-Indo-European p(e)r-sth₂-* ‘something sticking or standing out’, as the source of the Indo-European forms cited by the authors.
363. p/äsA* ‘root’: Kartvelian pasw-* ‘root’ ~ Dravidian [vaca* (< p₁aca*) ‘type of edible root’] ~ Altaic P/ä/sA* ‘trunk, stem; handle’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.
2. As already pointed out (no. 362, comment 2), Proto-Dravidian initial /v-/* is not from Proto-Nostratic initial /p-/* ~ p₁-/*.

3. Startostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1086—1087) reconstruct Proto-Altaic pěsá* ‘handle’. Proto-Altaic initial */p-/ (< Proto-Nostratic initial */p’-/) does not correspond to Proto-Kartvelian initial */p-/ (< Proto-Nostratic initial */p^h-/).
364. per/e/* ‘rind, skin, peel’: Hamito-Semitic p₁r-* ‘rind, skin, peel’ ~ Uralic pere* ‘skin, rind, film’ ~ Dravidian p₁er₁* ‘rind, skin, peel’. Possible.

Comments:

1. There does not appear to be any justification for reconstructing Proto-Afrasian initial */p₁-/. The forms cited from the Afrasian daughter languages by the authors point to Proto-Afrasian initial */f-/ (cf. the table of Afrasian sound correspondences in Bomhard (Chapter 7)).
 2. Likewise, there is no justification for reconstructing Proto-Dravidian initial */p₁-/. All of the forms listed by Burrow—Emeneau (1984:391, no. 4417) point to Proto-Dravidian initial */p-/ , including Telugu beraḍu ‘bark, rind, shell’ and baraḍu ‘bark of a tree’.
 3. Rédei (1986—1988:374) reconstructs Proto-Uralic perz* ‘skin, rind’.
 4. Not in Bomhard (this book).
365. p/uncē* ‘body hair’: Kartvelian [pačw*-/(?) poč*- (< pawč*- ?) ‘body hair’] ~ Indo-European pus-, pous- ‘(body) hair, down’ ~ Uralic punče* ‘down, feathers’ ~ Dravidian p₁occu* ‘hair, down’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Everything about this etymology is just wrong.

366. p/u/ñ/a* ‘hair, fur, feathers’: Uralic puna* ‘hair, fur, feathers’ ~ Dravidian p₁ūṭ₁* ‘hair, fur, down, small feathers’ ~ Altaic Puñ₁* ‘hair, fur, feathers’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Dravidian medial */-ṭ-/ does not correspond either to Proto-Uralic medial */-n-/ or to Proto-Altaic medial */-ń-/ (= */-n^y-/). Proto-Uralic medial */-n-/ does not correspond to Proto-Altaic medial */-ń-/ (= */-n^y-/).
 2. Rédei (1986—1988:402) reconstructs Proto-Uralic puna* ‘hair’.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1186) reconstruct Proto-Altaic p’úne* (= p^hun^ye*) ‘hair; feather’.
367. p’ad₁* ‘to fall’: Hamito-Semitic [pdH* ‘to fall, to lie down’] ~ Indo-European ped-* ‘to fall’ ~ Dravidian paṭ₁* ‘to fall, to lower (oneself), to sit, to lie down’. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Indo-European */-d-/ (= */-tʰ-/ according to the glottalic model of Proto-Indo-European consonantism) does not correspond either to Proto-Afrasian */-d-/ or to Proto-Dravidian */-tʰ-/ (< Proto-Nostratic */-d-/).
 2. The Afrasian material cited by the authors points to Proto-Afrasian medial ejective */-tʰ-/ (cf. Hausa fāḍā ‘to fall into, to fall onto, to descend on; to throw oneself into, onto; to attack’, fāḍi; to fall, to descend; to set [of sun]’; etc.).
368. pʰalga* ‘fortified settlement’: Hamito-Semitic bl(H)* (< plg* ?) ‘settlement, dwelling’ ~ Indo-European plH-* ‘fortified settlement, fortress, city’ ~ Uralic palγʌ* ‘settlement, dwelling’ ~ Dravidian paḷli* ‘settlement, building, temple’ ~ Altaic palagʌ* (> Mongolian balaya-) ‘city, fortress, building’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Faulty sound correspondences. Proto-Afrasian initial */b-/ does not correspond to initial */p-/ found in the other Nostratic daughter languages.
3. Ad hoc sound law — Proto-Afrasian bl(H)* does not come from plg*.
4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1093) reconstruct Proto-Altaic piǎlagV* ‘fortress, group of houses’. Strictly speaking, Proto-Altaic initial */p-/ is from Proto-Nostratic initial ejective */pʰ-/.
5. Rédei (1986—1988:351) reconstructs Proto-Ugrian (? Finno-Ugrian) palγʌ* ‘village’, while Sammallahti (1988:548) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian pālwa* ‘village; idol’.

Bomhard (no. 92) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form on the basis of evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and (?) Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) pʰal-a* ‘settlement, settled place’

369. pʰaliHma* ‘palm’: Indo-European p̄lmā* (< plHma*) ‘palm’ ~ Uralic p/elʹŋa* ‘handful, palm’ ~ Altaic pʰaliŋa* ‘palm’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Watkins (1985:490) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European p̄l₂-mā*; Mallory—Adams (1997:255) reconstruct Proto-Indo-European pólh_am* ‘palm of the hand’; Wodtko—Irslinger—Schneider (2008:562) reconstruct Proto-Indo-European p̄lh₂-mo/ah₂-* ‘palm’.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:384) reconstructs Proto-Uralic piŋa* ‘flat of the hand’ as the ancestor of the Uralic forms cited by the authors of the current volume. Clearly, this does not belong here.

4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1121—1122) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic p'ālŋa* (~ -e) (= p^hālŋa*, perhaps < p^hāli-ŋa*) 'palm'.

Bomhard (no. 90) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form on the basis of evidence from Indo-European and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic (n.) p^hal-a* 'flat of the hand, palm'

Derivative of:

(vb.) p^hal-* to spread, to extend';

(n.) p^hal-a* 'that which is wide, flat, level, broad, open: expanse, open space or surface'; (adj.) 'wide, flat, level, broad, open'

370. p'ala* 'tooth': Dravidian paɻa* 'tooth' ~ Altaic [Paɻa* '(molar) tooth']. Strong.

Comments:

1. Krishnamurti (2003:46, 108, 196, and 484) reconstructs Proto-Dravidian pal* 'tooth'.
2. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1075) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic pala* (~ p^h-*) 'tooth'. This points to Proto-Nostratic initial */p'-/.
3. Not in Bomhard (this book). I would reconstruct Proto-Nostratic p'al-a* 'tooth'.

371. p'a/se* 'penis': Indo-European pes-, pes-os, pes-n-* 'penis' ~ Uralic p/a/še* 'penis'. Strong.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Rédei (1986—1988:345) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian pačz* 'penis', but Sammallahti (1988:548) reconstructs Proto-Finno-Ugrian pā/o/ooši* 'penis'.
3. Pokorny (1959:824) reconstructs Proto-Indo-European pes-, pesos- 'penis'.

Bomhard (no. 110) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic form on the basis of evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, Uralic, and Altaic (Old Uyghur):

Proto-Nostratic (n.) p^has^v-a* 'sperm, semen; male genitals, penis; descendant, offspring'

372. p'ä/jla* 'to fall': Hamito-Semitic pl-* 'to fall' ~ Indo-European *(s)phōl- 'to fall' ~ (?) Dravidian vēl-* (< p₁ajl-* ?) 'to fly, to lower oneself' ~ Altaic PEjle-* 'to fly, to soar; to rush downward; to fall (leaves)'. Weak.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. Ad hoc sound law — Proto-Dravidian vēl-* does not come from p₁ajl-*.
3. Faulty sound correspondences. The Proto-Dravidian and Proto-Altaic (see below) forms should be removed.
4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1142) reconstruct Proto-Altaic p^čīle* (~ -i) (= p^hīle*) ‘to fly, to soar, to flap’.

As an alternative to the etymology proposed by the authors of this volume, Bomhard (no. 125) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms on the basis of evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Kartvelian, and Indo-European:

Proto-Nostratic root p^hul-* (~ p^hol-*) stem indicating downward motion:

(vb.) p^hul-* ‘to fall, to fall down, to collapse, to ruin, etc.’

(n.) p^hul-a* ‘fall, collapse, ruin’; (adj.) ‘fallen, ruined, weakened; low, base, vile, mean’

373. p^ʕ/eHhá* ‘to shepherd, to defend, to take care of’: Indo-European pō-/pī-* (< pōi-* < pe/h₁i-) ‘to shepherd, to defend, to protect, to take care of’ ~ Uralic pīña (< pēña* ?) ‘to shepherd, to defend, to maintain, to take care of’ ~ Dravidian pēñɒ-* ‘to defend, to take care of’. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
2. The Proto-Indo-European form cited by the authors does not belong here.
3. Rédei (1986—1988:413—414) reconstructs Proto-Uralic p^ʕñɜ-* (= p^ʕñɜɜ-*) ‘to watch over, to take care of (reindeer herds)’.

Bomhard (no. 118) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms on the basis of evidence from Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root p^hin^y-* (~ p^hen^y-*):

(vb.) p^hin^y-* ‘to watch (over), to protect, to nourish, to nurture’;

(n.) p^hin^y-a* ‘protection, care; feeding, nourishing, nourishment’

Note: Bomhard (no. 118) includes the following Indo-European forms:

Proto-Indo-European p^hen-* ‘food, protection’: Latin penus ‘food supplies, provisions’; Lithuanian pėnas ‘food’, penù, penėti ‘to feed, to fatten’; Gothic fenea ‘barley-groats, porridge’; Farsi panāh ‘refuge, protection’.

374. p^ʕirka* ‘to ask’: Hamito-Semitic brk* (< prk* ?) ‘to ask, to pray, to bless’ ~ Indo-European prek-* ‘to ask’ ~ Altaic p^ʕir/u/* ‘to ask, to pray (for, against), to bless, to damn, to inquire of divinity, to conjure’. Possible.

Comments:

1. This is incorrectly numbered 373 — it should be no. 374.
2. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction. There is no justification whatsoever for reconstructing Proto-Nostratic medial velar ejective */-ḳ-/ (= */-k'-/).
3. Ad hoc sound law — Proto-Afrasian *brk does not come from *p̣rk. The Afrasian evidence should be removed.
4. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1144—1145) reconstruct Proto-Altaiic *p̣ŕru (= *p̣ḥŕru) 'to pray, to bless'.

Bomhard (no. 135) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms on the basis of evidence from Afrasian (Southern Cushitic), Indo-European, and Altaic:

Proto-Nostratic root *p̣ḥir- (~ *p̣her-):

(vb.) *p̣ḥir- 'to ask, to request, to entreat, to beseech, to pray';

(n.) *p̣ḥir-a 'request, entreaty, prayer'

Note: Bomhard (no. 135) includes the following Afrasian (Southern Cushitic) forms:

Proto-Southern Cushitic *f̣ir- 'to pray, to ask for (something)' > Iraqw f̣irim- 'to pray, to ask for (something)'; Burunge f̣irim- 'to pray, to ask for (something)'; Alagwa f̣irim- 'to pray, to ask for (something)'; Ma'a -fi 'to perform (a ceremony)'.

375. *p̣'oḳwe 'cattle': Hamito-Semitic *ḅkr (< *p̣'kr) 'large horned cattle, bull' ~ Indo-European *peḳu '(small) cattle' ~ Altaic *p̣'oke-ŕ 'bull, large horned cattle'. Possible.

Comments:

1. Erroneous Proto-Nostratic reconstruction.
 2. Ad hoc sound law — Proto-Afrasian *ḅkr does not come from *p̣'kr. The Afrasian evidence should be removed.
 3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:1168—1169) *p̣'oḳi (-ŕV) (~ -e) (= *p̣ḥoḳḥi) 'ox, cow'.
 4. Not in Bomhard (this book).
376. (?) qama 'to seize': Hamito-Semitic *ḥm- 'to seize, to take, to gather', *m- 'to take' ~ Indo-European *hem-, *meH- 'to seize, to take' ~ Dravidian *am- 'to squeeze'. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

As an alternative to the etymology proposed by the authors of this volume, Bomhard (no. 413) reconstructs the following Proto-Nostratic forms on the basis of evidence from Afrasian, Dravidian, Indo-European, and Uralic:

Proto-Nostratic root k^ham-* (~ k^həm-) or q^ham- (~ q^həm-*):
 (vb.) k^ham-* or q^ham-* ‘to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch’;
 (n.) k^ham-a* or q^ham-a* ‘grip, hold, hand(ful); bond, fetter’

Note: Bomhard (no. 413) includes the following evidence from the Nostratic daughter languages:

- A. Proto-Afrasian kam-* ‘to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch’: Proto-Semitic kam-* (kam-a~, kam-aw/y-) ‘to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch’ > Arabic kamaša ‘to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch’, kamša ‘a handful’; Akkadian kamū ‘to capture, to overcome, to ensnare’, kamū ‘fetters’, kamū ‘captured, captive’, kāmū (f. kāmītu) ‘ensnaring’, kamītu ‘bonds, captivity’, kimītu, kimūtu ‘captivity’. Berber: Tuareg əkməm ‘to hold on tightly to something vertical; to clench, to press, to squeeze (for example, to weigh down, to bother, to annoy, to worry, to cause difficulties or problems)’, takmant ‘a muzzle’; Mzab takmamt ‘a muzzle’; Kabyle kəm, kəmməm ‘to muzzle, to suffocate, to stop someone from speaking’, takmamt ‘a muzzle’. Proto-Southern Cushitic kam-* ‘to hold’ > Iraqw kom- ‘to have’; Burunge kom- ‘to have’; Asa kom- ‘to have’; K’wadza komos- ‘to grip’; Dahalo kam- ‘to hold’.
- B. Dravidian: Koraga kamḍi ‘to steal’; Telugu kamucu ‘to hold, to seize’.
- C. Proto-Indo-European k^hem-t^h-/k^hom-t^h-/k^hṃ-t^h-* ‘(vb.) to seize, to grasp, to grip, to clutch; (n.) hand’: Gothic handus ‘hand’, -hinþan ‘to seize’ (used only in compounds: fra-hinþan ‘to capture, to imprison’, fra-hunþans ‘prisoner’), hunþs ‘booty’; Old Icelandic hönd ‘hand’, henda ‘to catch with the hand’; Old Swedish hinna ‘to obtain’; Swedish hand ‘hand’; Norwegian hand ‘hand’; Danish haand ‘hand’; Old English hand ‘hand’, ge-hendan ‘to hold’, hentan ‘to try to seize, to attack, to seize’, hūþ ‘plunder, booty’, huntian ‘to hunt’; Old Frisian hand, hond ‘hand’; Old Saxon hand ‘hand’; Dutch hand ‘hand’; Old High German hant ‘hand’ (New High German Hand), -hunda in herihunda ‘spoils of war’.
- D. Uralic: Proto-Finno-Ugrian käme(-ne)* ‘hand; palm, flat of the hand’ > Finnish kämmen ‘palm, flat of the hand; paw’; Vote čämmäl ‘palm, flat of the hand’; Estonian kämmal, kämmel ‘palm, flat of the hand’; (?) Lapp / Saami (Kola) kiem ‘flat of the hand, hand’; Ostyak / Xanty (Eastern) kömən in kömənkäγər ‘the hollow hands as a measure’.
377. qowe* ‘opening’: Hamito-Semitic ḥw* ‘opening, door’ ~ Uralic owe-* ‘door’ ~ (?) Dravidian āv-* ‘to gape, to yawn; to open the mouth’. Rejected.

Comment: Faulty sound correspondences. Lax semantics.

378. qurE* 'to love': Kartvelian qwar-* 'to love' ~ Dravidian kūr*_{LA} 'love, desire' ~ Altaic k'uri* 'to desire intensely, to love'. Rejected.

Comments:

1. Faulty sound correspondences.
2. Klimov (1998:239—240) reconstructs Proto-Kartvelian qwar-* 'to love'.
3. Starostin—Dybo—Mudrak (2003:569—570) reconstruct Proto-Altaic gǔjre* (= gǔjr'e*) 'to love' as the ancestor of the Altaic forms cited by the authors of this volume.

SUMMARY / CONCLUSIONS

One of the main reasons why I chose to review volume 3 separately should now be apparent — including it in the review of the first two volumes would have distorted the final statistics resulting from the evaluation of the Nostratic etymologies actually prepared by Illič-Svityč. The reason for this is that the etymologies in volume 3 are uniformly substandard (inferior to those prepared by Illič-Svityč) — even those that were judged to be acceptable almost always had problems.

At the beginning of this review, I laid out the criteria for evaluation and proposed a scale consisting of four categories: “strong”, “possible”, “weak”, and “rejected”. Now, we can summarize our findings in terms of those categories, applied to the 25 entries in the third, and final, volume of Illič-Svityč's Nostratic dictionary:

Category	Number of Items	Percentage
Possible	7	28%
Weak	1	4%
Rejected	15	60%
Totals	25	100%
